Rupert Costo Archive of the American Indian	1

COLLECTION OVERVIEW

The Rupert Costo Library of the American Indian consists of approximately 8,000 books; 264 linear feet of over 15,000 documents, pamphlets, tape recordings, and slides; and more than 100 ethnographic artifacts and artwork. This library is one of the larger collections of research material relating to Native American life within the United States and the largest collection of material on twentieth-century Californian Indian culture and heritage available anywhere.

Rupert and Jeannette Costo, both of whom were Native American, were prominent national leaders in the fight for the economic and social rights for American Indians. Among their many accomplishments were the founding of the American Indian Historical Society in 1950 and the Indian Historian Press in 1970. In addition to overseeing the publication of more than fifty monographs, they produced The Indian Historian, a scholarly journal; Wassaja, a national advocacy newspaper of Indian affairs; and The Weewish Tree, a magazine for children. The Costos also endowed the first professorial chair in American Indian History, which was established at the University of California, Riverside, in 1986.

The Rupert Costo Archive of the American Indian, in particular, contains all of the manuscript and non-monograph publications amassed by the Costos as a result of their social and scholarly endeavor. The original source documents produced and collected by the Costos over their lifetimes include manuscript and published materials on land, fishing, and water rights; Indian sovereignty issues and land claims; language and education, and a slew of other issues. The types of materials researchers will find in this collection include correspondence, litigation briefs, court records, congressional testimony and legislation, committee reports, tribal newsletters, scholarly field and research notes, newspaper clipping, and much else. The first donation of material was made in 1986 with the establishment of the Rupert Costo Chair; the second and final donation was made in 2001, the year of Jeannette Costo's death. Originally cataloged by former Rupert Costo Chair Cheryl A. Metoyer-Duran, documents included original 1986 donation, which constitute the contents of this microform edition, are accessible through an online finding aid mounted on the Online Archives of California, available free from the California Digital Library.

INTRODUCTION TO THE COLLECTION

In an ideal world, the scholarly value of an archival collection would correlate with the amount of usage it receives from researchers. No such correlation exists, however, in the case of the Costo Archive of the American Indian. An extremely valuable and in some ways unduplicated collection, it has heretofore not received the attention that it so deserves.

This will change. Much as Indian country today is undergoing an impressive, if uneven, renaissance, so this collection's true merit will shine, much to the benefit of those who work within it. Almost anyone interested in modern Indian life and history will find something of value in the Costo Archive. Indeed, many researchers could wisely begin their quests with it. This applies especially to teachers, scholars, students, and tribal members interested in Native activism, tribal politics from 1935 to 1980, the modern civil rights era in American history, the politics of representation, Native intellectual history and sovereignty, the story of California Indians, and the Costos themselves.

Before highlighting how specific aspects of this collection support the study of these and other areas, we should consider why the Archive as a whole has remained something of a "sleeper." Doing so will explain why the Archive's future looks so bright as well as deepen our appreciation for the foresight shown by the Archive's creators, Rupert and Jeannette Costo.

The first reason the Archive has not received much use is obvious. It is new. Established at the University of California, Riverside, in 1986, it initially went uncataloged, making it nigh impossible for researchers to use it effectively, if at all. This situation changed thanks to the diligent efforts of Cheryl A. Metoyer-Duran, who held the academic chair endowed by Rupert and Jeanette Costo from 1993 to 1997. Unfortunately, no sooner was this work completed than the Archive was temporarily displaced physically from its location in Tomas Rivera Library at University of California, Riverside. This was due to a state-mandated seismic upgrade of the building. The Archive, like all other special collections at University of California, Riverside, was placed in temporary storage. The symbolism of such event, given the subject matter, was unfortunate. Rumors spread that the Archive had been exiled, much like Native peoples themselves, to an undesirable and relatively inaccessible space on campus. Some said it would never reappear or reopen. At last, however, workers and engineers completed the renovations of the main library, and the Archive returned home to a fully renovated, state-of-the-art facility. A new director of special collections, Melissa Conway, had been recently appointed, as had the first permanent holder of Costo Chair, Joel W. Martin, bringing a renewed energy to the university's Native American studies research program and thus, raising the visibility of this treasure trove of important archival research material. Starting in late 2001 a large portion of the Archive itself was microfilmed, making it available for the first time to people outside of the University of California, Riverside.

The second reason the Archive has yet to receive the attention it deserves is more subtle but more significant. Its documents, photographs, and sound recordings derive from a very recent period, one as yet understudied and unappreciated. While the Costos themselves were scholars of the entire history of Native America, with a particularly strong interest in the mission period of California—all of which is amply represented within the Archive—the core strength of the collection lay in the middle decades of the twentieth century, the period of the Costos' greatest public prominence. As a consequence, the 1960s and 1970s are the most strongly represented periods. Too recent to appear “exotic” to historians, especially those old enough to remember it firsthand, there is little doubt that the passage of time will rectify this all-to-common myopia. Historians, having done a superb job reconstructing colonial contact and documenting nineteenth-century conquests and renewals, will no doubt soon seek to put the twentieth century in perspective for Native Americans as they have for other populations. And when they do, they will come appreciate the Costo Archive as a key window into those critical times when Native men and women like the Costos fought to move the nation from its program of termination (1945-1961) to one that supported self-determination and American Indian sovereignty (1975-present).

A third reason that the Archive has remain relatively invisible stems from a geographical bias. Scholars of American Indian history typically direct their attention elsewhere. American colonial historians, ethnohistorians, anthropologists, literary critics, and others have gravitated toward the stories of peoples living in the Northeast, in the Southeast, on the Plains, or in the Southwest. In short, scholars have not yet fully appreciated the importance of California Indians, past and present. While time alone will not solve this problem, the facts themselves may one day bring California its due. California, after all, had the largest precontact population of first peoples anywhere in what is now the United States. California now has the largest contemporary population of American Indians of any state (surpassing Oklahoma, as recorded in the 2000 census). Barring Alaska, California today hosts the greatest number of federally recognized tribes--approximately 110. It also holds the most tribes attempting to gain or regain federal recognition. In recent decades, California tribes have affected national affairs and sparked Supreme Court cases that have significantly enhanced Native sovereignty (California v. Cabazon Band, 480 U.S. 202 [1987]) and influenced the religious freedom of Americans nationwide (Lyng, Secretary of Education, et al. v. Northwest Indian Cemetery Protective Association, et al. [No. 86-103] [1988]). Only when scholarship in Native American studies has finally come to terms with these facts, will California Indian Studies flourish and researchers benefit from the foresight of the Costos.

Rupert Costo (1906-1989) and Jeannette Henry Costo (1909-2001) spent their adult lives advocating on behalf of American Indians. Rupert Costo was of the Cahuilla tribe from Anza. A fine athlete in his youth, Rupert Costo briefly played semiprofessional basketball. During the late 1920s, he attended Riverside City College and then worked successfully as a highway engineer, hydrologist, meteorologist, and surveyor before becoming a historian, author, publisher, researcher, and speaker. A tribal spokesman for eight years, he helped found an electrical cooperative in Anza, the Anza Farm Bureau, the Anza Soil Conservation District, and the Riverside Farm Bureau. In fact, he and his relatives helped persuade state legislators to locate a new branch of the University of California in Riverside County.

In the early 1950s, Rupert Costo married Jeannette Henry, an Eastern Cherokee descendant who had run away from home at age seventeen. Jeannette had worked in the late 1930s as a police reporter for the Detroit Free Press. After moving to California, she worked for many years as a newspaper reporter in Corona, then as a public relations officer for Blue Shield. Through decades of marriage spent in the cosmopolitan setting of Haight-Ashbury in San Francisco, the couple remained inseparable, joined in a common cause to which they devoted all of their energies, earnings, and intellect. As activists, writers, and organizers, they especially sought to promote the study of American Indian history through their scholarly, educational, and philanthropic efforts. Both held that the true story of American Indians had not been properly told and work towards amending that error. Together they wrote Natives of the Golden State: The California Indians (1995) and coedited Indian Voices: the Native American Today (1974) and The Missions of California: A Legacy of Genocide (1987), an important exposé of the brutality of that regime. Indeed, this last work derailed or at least delayed the canonization of Father Serra, the missions' founder. They also wrote Indian Treaties: Two Centuries of Dishonor (1977) and compiled A Thousand Years of American Indian Storytelling (1981). They also worked on projects separately. Rupert Costo wrote Textbooks and the American Indian (1970) while Jeannette Costo edited The American Indian Reader (1972). Not surprisingly, the Archive preserves the research notes, early drafts, editorial correspondence, related artwork, and published and unpublished work that served as the basis for their scholarship. But this is not, by any means, all of what the Archive contains.

In 1964, Rupert and Jeannette, as Cahuilla and Cherokee respectively, helped found the American Indian Historical Society with individuals from the Tolowa, Quechan, Maidu, Hupa, Ohlone, Karuk, Navajo, and Paiute tribes. Rupert Costo served as its first and only President from the Society's advent until its dissolution as a corporation in 1986. Based in San Francisco, the Society's initial objectives comprised the following:

- 1) to study, interpret, and disclose the facts concerning the history of the American Indians, to preserve and protect the remaining evidence of Indian customs, arts, and cultures, and to correct the historical record as to the true story of the Indians and their contributions to civilization; 2) To inform and educate the public at large concerning the history of the American Indians; 3) To work for the education, the good and welfare, and the cultural development of the American Indians.

(“Minutes of the American Indian Historical Society Board Meetings, July 14, 1964,” accession #012.009.001).

The Society was also to be “non-profit absolutely” and “non-political absolutely.”

In the years that followed, the Society took concrete steps to protect Native gravesites, correct state textbooks, organize conferences, promote Native artists, defend land claims and water rights, and publish journals, newspapers, and books. In 1968, it led a campaign in Sacramento for legislation to protect Indian arts and crafts. In 1969, it organized a series of teacher workshops in California to address curricular issues. In 1971, it established the Indian Arts and Crafts Commission, which sponsored several art exhibits in San Francisco. All of these activities and many others are well documented in the Costo Archive, providing researchers with unmatched access to the viewpoint, rhetorical strategies, and organizational and educational efforts of Indian activists during the modern American civil rights era.

Scholars, researchers, and students with an interest in the history of twentieth-century Native American publishing can ill afford to ignore the Costo Archive. It documents several successful or pathbreaking publication ventures. In 1964, the Society produced the first issue of The Indian Historian in order “to correct the record, to write history as it should be written, to interpret correctly the aboriginal past, to report honestly the immense contributions to modern society made by the Indian American.” This journal, which involved leading academic consultants of the day--Sol Tax, William Sturtevant, Omer Stewart, Lowell Bean, Carl Sauer--lasted 18 years and reached tens of thousands of readers.

The Costos and the Society continually sought to reach wider audiences, in Indian country and beyond. In 1971, they launched the Weewish Tree, a publication for Indian children, which ran steadily for a decade. In 1973, they started Wassaja—the title for which derived from the Yavapai name of Dr. Carlos Montezuma, “whose life was dedicated to the struggle for our people for self-determination”—a national newspaper of American Indian life and affairs. The paper’s creators saw it as “The Indians’ Signal for Self-Determination.” Its first issue ran 24 pages and included articles on water rights, self-determination, and the importance of knowing history in order to prevail in ongoing struggles. “Wassaja presents facts, information, carefully sifted out from rumors and gossip,” reads the first issue, expressing the belief of the publishers and the writers that education was a key concern for those inside and outside of the Indian community. It further declared that “Wassaja presents alternatives to violence,” carrying forward the ethos of the civil right era achievements of the decade before (Wassaja, Vol. 1, No. 1, January 1973).

Early in the history of the Society, the Costos also started a for-profit book and journal publishing concern, the Indian Historian Press. It published and reprinted dozens of titles. In addition to those authored or edited by Costos, the Indian Historian Press reprinted as Denton Bedford’s Tsali (1972), Joseph Senungetuck’s Give or Take a Century, an Eskimo Saga (1971), Alolp L. Dial and David K. Eliades’s The Only Land I Know: A History of the Lumbee Indians (1975), Donald M. Bahr’s Pima and Papago Ritual Oratory: A Study of Three Texts (1975), James La Pointe’s Legends of the Lakota (1976), Joe S. Sando’s The Pueblo Indians (1976), Donald A. Grinde, Jr.’s The Iroquois and the Founding of the American Nation (1977), and Jack Norton’s Genocide in Northwestern California (1979). This emphasis on education and literacy not only fit the Costos’ immediate social world—one that stood outside the reservation system as urban in focus and of an educated peer group—but served the objectives of influencing public opinion and affecting federal policy. Native men and women of the Costos’ generation had experienced and grown tired of the “ping-pong of Indian policy” (“Working for Justice in Indian Country,” October 31, 2001, Indian Country Today, p. A4). A man as long-lived as Rupert Costo had seen many dramatic shifts and how their effects ultimately impacted those whom they had presumably meant to serve, sometimes long after the original policy had lapsed. To this end, the Costo Archive provides particularly rich coverage of the immediate and layered impacts of shifting federal policies on Native life and governance.

Born before the Indian Citizenship Act (1924), Rupert Costo could remember from his childhood a time when the federal government sought to obliterate tribal identities by breaking up reservation landbases and forcing Indian children to attend boarding schools. As a young adult, he witnessed passage of the New Deal’s Indian Reorganization Act, which affirmed the right of Indians to a tribal identity. Among other things, the Reorganization Act prescribed bureaucratic forms for the tribal governments, models of governance that did not always fit or work well. Indeed, scholars interested in modern tribal governance will find in the Costo Archive much firsthand documentation recording tribal members’ complaints about tribal justice, enrollment policies, fiscal irregularities, and problematic voting procedures. However, researchers will also find notices of support from tribal members who saw their governments as defenders of their rights and corporate tribal existence.

After World War II, as Rupert Costo entered middle age, federal policy took another dramatic turn. From 1945 to 1961, the federal government attempted to terminate Indian governments. The basic idea behind this policy was to do away with the unique relationship between the federal and tribal governments, one that clearly differed from traditional federal-nonfederal government relationships within the United States. The assumption was that the Indian populations would seamlessly flow into the mainstream, regardless of their own desires. Reflecting this phase of federal-Indian relations, the Costo Archive contains many legal documents generated by the Indian Claims Commission, the administrative tool intended to settle all claims once and for all. The Archive also traces efforts by the Costos and other to support tribes seeking to reverse or avoid termination and to gain federal recognition or restoration. Records of this phase in twentieth-century Native history is a particular boon for legal historians and scholars of Native American sovereignty.

Despite the direct attempt to terminate them, most tribal governments survived. But the ping-pong pattern persisted. In 1975, reflecting the wider national movement toward increasing civil rights, Congress officially adopted a new policy: self-determination. Under Congressional act, authority was given to the secretaries of interior and of health, education and welfare to enter into contracts with tribes and other Indian organizations for the delivery of federal services. The Costo Archive provides considerable primary documentation of how this all worked out. But it does more than that. Because it contains the correspondence of many tribal officials, emerging Native scholars, and activists, the Archive provides a remarkably rich record of how Native leaders defined the notion of “self-determination” and what they hoped it might mean and could bring to Indian people. In this area of study, cultural historians are the true beneficiaries, since through the Archive they can recover important currents in American Indian intellectual history and public policy debates.

By the 1970s, as the era of self-determination dawned, the Costos stood at the apex of their influence as activists, educators, journalists, historians, and organizers. Tribal leaders and members, scholars, and journalists throughout the United States corresponded with them, seeking advice, support, and insight. Their letters chronicle the concerns that occupied tribal leaders, particularly the lingering as well as newly emerging contests with the federal government.

In the ebb and flow of setbacks and disputes documented within the letters in the Archive, correspondents commonly appealed to the Costos for publicity and support; assailing tribal officials among the Chickasaws, the Chippewa-Cree, and Chinook; aired disputes about tribal membership; objected to inappropriate publications describing Native religions; opposed proposed mining and development projects; and lamented the loss of federal recognition. Other correspondents, however, shared their successes or celebrated legal victories. For this reason, students interested in tribal politics and tracing the rise of Indian sovereignty will find the portion of the collection comprising this correspondence—this give-and-take among lawyers, the Costos, tribal leaders and members—of unparalleled value.

Interestingly, in this era just before the Indian Gaming Act of 1988, gaming does not appear all that important. In fact, it is hardly mentioned at all. The Archive, however, does trace the emergence of a discrete form of identity politics, revealing how Native American leaders—including the Costos—sought to counter stereotypes and replace them with more accurate representations of history, culture, and lived reality of Native peoples. Influenced by the civil rights movement's call for self-respect and justice, the Costos, for example, systematically critiqued textbooks that they considered biased or anti-Indian, wrote of the deleterious impact of Indian "mascots," and praised contributions to society made by American Indians. In 1986, they founded the first academic chair devoted to American Indian history, the Rupert Costo Chair at the University of California, Riverside. In detailing all of these efforts, the Archive offers material to twentieth-century historians of the United States for studying the effect of the civil rights movement on Native rights movements.

In the end, specific questions will draw different researchers to different parts of the Costo Archive. However every research should take a moment to consider the achievement represented by the Archive as a whole. For its existence points to the great foresight of those who created it. This rich and valuable Archive exists only because of the sacrifice, hard work, and generosity of two remarkable individuals, Rupert and Jeannette Costo. True, they have passed away, but the result of their life's work—this Archive—remains to enrich our understanding of Native peoples during this important transitional period in American history.

EDITORIAL NOTE

The intention of this note is to describe the more technical aspects of the microform publication of this research collection.

Range of Material

The Rupert Costo Archive of the American Indian is part of the Ruperto Costo Library of the American Indian. It contains primarily correspondence, legal documents, newsletters, newspaper clippings, and other primary source materials. The period covered ranges primarily from 1935 to 1980.

Description and Labeling

The original finding for this collection labels its contents by using a 9-digit number that is further subdivided into three 3-digit numbers. Each 3-digit number is separated by a period. The first 3-digit number represents the box number; the second 3-digit number signifies the folder number; the third 3-digit number denotes an individual item within a folder. An example of this numbering system appears below.

Reel	Box/Folder/Item	Description
001	001.007.016	Correspondence to Allen Rowland from Rupert Costo, 5/24/74, concerns the validity of the membership in the Cheyenne of John Freesoul McConnell.

In this example, Ruperto Costo's letter to Allen Rowland is housed in box 1, folder 7. Within folder 7, it is item 16. (Numbered items will have the nine-digit code inscribed in pencil on the first page of the individual item.)

It should be noted that when cataloging was performed at the folder level only and not at the item level, then the Item number by default was 001. An example of this exception in the numbering system appears below.

Reel	Box/Folder/Item	Description
036	039.001.001	Correspondence and reports pertaining to the Jicarilla Apache Water Inventory, 1972.
037	039.002.001	Reports and correspondence regarding the Water Conference, supported by the American Indian Historical Society, Albuquerque, New Mexico, July 1972.
037	039.003.001	Correspondence regarding water issues, variety of sources, 1972.

In the above example, a variety of items are contained in each of the first three folders of box 39. However, because item-level cataloging was not performed for these folders, the item number is 001 by default.

It should be further noted that in the original cataloging of this collection, an error was made in recording all folders. When items were individually numbered within a folder, no record had been made of the folder title itself. Primary Source Media has rectified this oversight by assigning entire folders with numbered items a nine-digit identifier that has 000 as its terminal three digits, as per the example below:

Reel	Box/Folder/Item	Description
037	040.001.000	Correspondence and report pertaining to the Jicarilla Apache water inventory and the Central Arizona Project

Unfilmed, Unpublished, and Restricted Materials

In this collection guide, a description for the entire collection appears, even though portions of the collection have not been microfilmed for publication. Information about these portions of the collection has been included in order to provide the researcher with a complete picture of the collection and allow the researcher the opportunity to make an informed decision about whether personal inspection of the collection is warranted.

Three types of materials have not been published for reasons of research need, privacy, and copyright.

- ❖ Research Need: Certain materials have not been microfilmed largely because of their relatively low priority with respect to research needs. Examples of such materials from the Rupert Costo Archive of the American Indian include the Costos' personal tax records and ledger and tax information concerning the Indian Historical Society.
- ❖ Privacy: In the interest of protecting the privacy of individuals, personnel files and correspondence concerning various matters, such as academic job searches conducted by the University California, Riverside, have not been filmed.
- ❖ Copyright: Publications determined, to the best of the ability of the publisher, to be under copyright were not microfilmed.

Recording Unfilmed Materials

Description entries for all unmicrofilmed material appears both within this collection guide and the microfilm reels themselves. If there is a record for an individual item, then the entry appears as follows within the collection guide:

Reel	Box/Folder/Item	Description
001	001.003.002	Palm Springs council, Indians resolve to improve relations, Daily, Riverside, California, 7/7/64, "Grievances to be told by Indians," Desert Sun, Palm Springs, 7/3/64, land use issues. Not microfilmed.

In the above example, item 2 from box 1, folder 3, comprises two newspaper articles from the Desert Sun, published in Palm Springs, California. This was not filmed owing to copyright considerations.

If an entire folder was not microfilmed, that, too, will have "not microfilmed" added to the end of its description, as in the following example below. The item number will, by default, read 001.

Reel	Box/Folder/Item	Description
014	009.025.001	American Indian Historical Society's invoices and canceled checks, 1/81. Not microfilmed.

When only a portion of material goes unmicrofilmed either within an item (such as a group of photographs) or from a folder for which there is only a folder-level description, then the nature of that material is described within parentheses, as appear in the examples below:

Reel	Box/Folder/Item	Description
002	001.021.002	Negatives of Cochiti Lake, New Mexico, development. Selected material not microfilmed (photographic negatives).

In this particular item, item 2 of box 1, folder 21, comprises a group of photographs among which are photographic negatives that cannot be captured on microfilm and for which the positives are already included. Other types of materials that might be excluded from an item or folder appear in the entry below.

Reel	Box/Folder/Item	Description
021	019.013.001	National Indian Activities Association, 8/14/75, contents of folder include photos, negatives and some correspondence. Selected material not microfilmed (duplicates, newspaper clippings, photographic negatives).

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The project would not have been possible without assistance from many individuals. Primary Source Media wishes to thank Frank Menchaca, who first recognized the value of this collection as a microfilm publication; Melissa Conway, director of special collections, and Sheryl Davis, preservation officer, both of the University of California, Riverside, for their commitment to making these historical resources widely available and their assistance in the organization and preservation of this significant collection; the host of student assistants at the University of California in Riverside, who performed an outstanding job in the timely and diligent preparation of the materials for microfilming; John Siev for his invaluable assistance in cataloging data that had been overlooked in the original preparation of the finding aid upon which the collection guide is based; Joel Martin, Rupert Costo Chair at the University of California, Riverside, for his deeply thought insights into the significance of this collection; project manager Debra Schotten for her assistance in reviewing the contents of the archive, assessing their status for microfilming, and correcting the finding aid accordingly; Monty Cornell for his invaluable microfilming expertise; and Colleen Mullin for her attention to and administration of the microfilming production process.
