SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

This Supplement to Part 23 of Papers of the NAACP reproduces the working case files of the NAACP's general counsel and the legal department staff for the period 1960–1972, focusing on the years 1965–1972. The case files in Supplement to Part 23 pertain to demonstrations and boycotts, employment discrimination, school desegregation, discrimination in the criminal justice system, and voting rights. The files consist of correspondence discussing strategic decisions in the litigation process, exhibits, briefs, lawyers' notes, depositions, and transcripts of court proceedings.

Due to the massive size of the NAACP Legal Department Case Files, UPA has organized this Supplement to Part 23 into several series based on geographic location. Series A covers southern states and is further divided into three sections. Section I covers Alabama, Arkansas, and Florida. Section II covers Georgia, Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Virginia. Section III covers Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, and Texas. Series B covers northeastern states, while Series C and D cover the Midwest and West, respectively. This guide provides a reel index as well as an alphabetical index of correspondents and subjects for the cases in Series A, Section II.

Series A, Section II includes files from several cases relating to demonstrations and protests. The Georgia case NAACP v. Overstreet had a significant impact on NAACP protest strategies and the financial health of the organization. NAACP v. Overstreet arose out of an incident on May 30, 1962, in a Savannah grocery store. On that day, Robert Bolton, a fourteen-year-old African American male, reported to the Savannah police that Haldred Overstreet, the owner and operator of the grocery store, had physically assaulted him. Bolton's mother contacted the Savannah NAACP branch, and the branch quickly decided to stage a boycott of Overstreet's store. The boycott continued until June 22, when Overstreet won a temporary restraining order against further picketing. Shortly thereafter, a jury awarded Overstreet damages in the amount of $85,793.05. After the supreme court of Georgia affirmed the judgment of the trial court, the NAACP filed a petition for a writ of certiorari with the U.S. Supreme Court. In December 1965, the Court initially agreed to consider one of the questions in the case but dismissed the writ of certiorari in April 1966; therefore, the ruling of the Georgia Supreme Court held.

The significant impact of NAACP v. Overstreet on the organization's operations is illustrated in part by a July 7, 1966, memorandum from NAACP General Counsel Robert L. Carter to all NAACP branches and NAACP personnel (Reel 9, Frame 0033). In the memorandum, Carter discussed how the decision would affect NAACP participation in boycotts and other protests against private persons or businesses. Carter stressed the need for the NAACP to be very cautious in its conduct. He also mentioned that when local branches undertook such protests, it was essential that they did so as units distinct from the NAACP national corporation. Carter noted that this strategy was necessary in order to prevent people like Overstreet from coming to New York to collect money from the NAACP.

Several other cases in this edition concern the rights of the NAACP and other civil rights organizations to engage in public protests against racial discrimination. The case of Kelly v. Page arose from civil rights demonstrations in Albany, Georgia, in the early 1960s. Asa D. Kelly, the mayor of Albany, sued the local Albany Movement and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, Congress of Racial Equality, and NAACP in an attempt to stop the demonstrations in the city. In North Carolina, Sellars v. NAACP involved the boycott of a Winston-Salem grocery store. The owners of the store, Howard E. Sellars and Jesse E. Sizemore, charged that the national NAACP, the Winston-Salem NAACP branch, and the Kimberly Park Neighborhood Association conspired to prevent consumers from entering their store. In their defense, the three organizations argued that Sellars treated his African American customers in a derogatory manner, sold beer and wine to minors, and once threatened to summon the Ku Klux Klan. The other boycott case in this edition is Hornstein v. NAACP. In this case, Stanley Hornstein, the owner of a Victoria, Virginia, grocery store, refused to display a sign condemning the Ku Klux Klan. The Lunenburg County NAACP branch and the Virginia Students' Civil Rights Committee coordinated a boycott against Hornstein's store.

Employment opportunities for African Americans had been an important part of the NAACP's agenda since the 1930s. After passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, with its Title VII provision against discrimination by employers, labor unions, and employment agencies, the NAACP filed many employment discrimination cases.

This edition contains employment discrimination cases from Georgia, Maryland, North Carolina, and Virginia. The most well-documented employment discrimination case in this edition is Banks v. Lockheed-Georgia Co. This case involved Ralph Banks and other African American employees of the Lockheed-Georgia Company, the Marietta, Georgia, branch of the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation. Banks and his fellow plaintiffs claimed that African American employees were denied promotions, that the company administered tests for promotions that had a discriminatory effect, that African Americans were excluded from supervisory positions, and that an atmosphere of racial intimidation pervaded the workplace. The files for this case include correspondence, lawyers' notes, and twenty-nine volumes of transcripts of the court proceedings. These proceedings include testimony from many Lockheed-Georgia employees describing working conditions at the plant. Among the files is a copy of the settlement of the case as well as correspondence related to the settlement (Reel 1, Frame 0472).

Other employment discrimination cases from Georgia are Jones v. J. P. Stevens Co., Jones v. Montag, Inc., and Luster v. Local 709, International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, AFL-CIO. The Maryland employment discrimination case is Morton v. Charles County Board of Education, in which faculty members in the Charles County school system charged that African American employees had been refused employment or promotion, or had been demoted or discharged, because of their race. In another part of this case, two of the plaintiffs were school children who argued that Charles County continued to maintain “racially identifiable schools.” The North Carolina employment discrimination case is Griggs v. Duke Power Co. Virginia cases on employment discrimination are Quarles v. Phillip Morris, Inc., United States v. Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Co., and United States v. Virginia Electric and Power Co.

School desegregation remained an important area of litigation for the NAACP during the period covered by this edition. The most significant and well-documented school desegregation case in this section is Bradley v. School Board of the City of Richmond. Parents of African American students originally brought this case in 1961, and it reached the U.S. Supreme Court in both 1965 and 1973. This case addressed many issues central to school desegregation controversies throughout the 1960s and 1970s, including “freedom of choice” plans, faculty desegregation, busing, and multidistrict desegregation remedies. In 1972, federal district court judge Robert R. Merhige Jr. ordered the merger of the Richmond schools with those in the surrounding Chesterfield and Henrico Counties. A federal appeals court overturned Merhige’s order, and, in 1974, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the appeals court ruling. Judge Merhige’s order and the 1974 Supreme Court decision are reproduced in this edition.

Other cases in this edition concern interracial marriage, rights of criminal defendants, libel and slander, and voting rights. Loving v. Virginia involved a challenge to Virginia’s law prohibiting interracial marriages. Richard Perry Loving and Mildred Jester married in Washington, D.C., in June 1958. After the marriage, they returned to Virginia and took up residence in Caroline County but were arrested in July for violating Virginia’s ban on interracial marriages. In January 1959, the Lovings pleaded guilty; the court sentenced them to one year in jail and then suspended the sentence, provided that the Lovings left the state of Virginia for twenty-five years. The Lovings moved back to Washington, D.C., but decided in 1963 to challenge the Virginia law regarding interracial marriages. In 1967, the U.S. Supreme Court found that the Virginia law violated the Fourteenth Amendment. The NAACP’s amicus curiae brief supporting the Lovings is reproduced in this edition. In State of North Carolina v. Mallory, the case that arose from a kidnapping incident in Monroe, North Carolina, the defendants claimed that they had been denied their right to counsel. Libel and slander cases include Fields v. Law, Naimaster v. NAACP, and four cases involving the Darlington, South Carolina, NAACP branch. Voting rights cases include Bacote v. Carter, in which the then-governor of Georgia, Jimmy Carter, was one of the defendants, and two cases from South Carolina: South Carolina NAACP State Conference of Branches v. West and Stevenson v. West.

This edition of Papers of the NAACP represents the second section of legal case files microfilmed by UPA focusing on the period after 1965. Other parts of Papers of the NAACP that contain significant documentation on the NAACP Legal Department are Part 23: Legal Department Case Files, 1956–1965; Part 22: Legal Department Administrative Files, 1956–1965; and Supplement to Part 16: Board of Directors File, 1966–1970.
