SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

In January 1967, at the opening session of the 90th Congress, the House leadership told Harlem representative Adam Clayton Powell that he would not participate when the other newly elected members took their oath of office. The House refused to seat Powell pending an investigation of his conduct, including possible misuse of public funds. In February, the Select Committee assigned to the case recommended to the full House that Powell be seated but censured for his conduct. The House, however, rejected the Select Committee's recommendation. It voted to exclude Powell and declared his seat vacant. Soon after, Powell and thirteen voters from New York's eighteenth congressional district sued Speaker of the House John W. McCormack and other House members and officers. The plaintiffs argued that McCormack and his co-defendants had violated the Constitution because Powell met all the qualifications for House office and had been chosen by the voters as their representative. The Supreme Court ruled in Powell's favor in December 1969.

In December 1970, a German court convicted army Privates Nathaniel Holmes Jr. and Bernard Tucker for the rape of a sixteen-year-old woman. Two months later, the court sentenced them to three years in jail. While the case was on appeal, the U.S. Army Eighth Infantry Division took custody of Holmes and Tucker. The two men, however, escaped to the United States. In early June 1971, they sought the assistance of New York congresswoman Shirley Chisholm. On June 8, Holmes and Tucker, accompanied by Chisholm, turned themselves in to army officials at the Pentagon building in Arlington, Virginia. The army told Chisholm that it would investigate the case before taking any further actions but also placed Holmes and Tucker in the confinement facility at Fort Belvoir, Virginia. On June 10, 1971, Captain J. Clay Smith, the army lawyer assigned to the case, informed Representative Chisholm that the military planned to put Holmes and Tucker on a 5 a.m. flight the next day back to Germany. Chisholm contacted NAACP lawyers who immediately brought the case to U.S. District Court Judge Barrington Parker. Parker issued a temporary restraining order preventing military officials from returning the accused men to Germany. For the next year and a half, the case stayed in U.S. courts while Holmes and Tucker remained confined at Fort Belvoir. In March 1972, Chisholm and thirty fellow Congress members, including presidential candidate Hubert H. Humphrey, sent a letter to army secretary Robert Froehlke appealing for action in the case. The New York Post reported that the military was procrastinating because it was "worried about the political repercussions in Germany" (Reel 6, Frame 0700).

Finally, in February 1973, the army sent Holmes and Tucker back to Germany where they were imprisoned until October 8, 1973. On October 9, the army dishonorably discharged Holmes and Tucker.

The cases of Adam Clayton Powell and of Nathaniel Holmes and Bernard Tucker are just two of the many interesting cases reproduced in this edition of Papers of the NAACP, Supplement to Part 23: Legal Department Case Files, 1960–1973, Series B: The Northeast, Section I: Connecticut, Delaware, District of Columbia, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Rhode Island. The documents in this section consist of the working case files of the NAACP's general counsel and legal department staff for Connecticut, Delaware, the District of Columbia, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Rhode Island. The cases from these states primarily relate to employment discrimination and school desegregation. The cases are organized alphabetically by state and within each state alphabetically by case name.

The NAACP had been concerned with employment discrimination since the 1930s, but the cases in this edition are particularly interesting because they include several early affirmative action cases. President John F. Kennedy first used the term "affirmative action" in Executive Order 10925, which created the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. In September 1965, President Lyndon Baines Johnson issued Executive Order 11246 requiring contractors to "take affirmative action to ensure that applicants are employed, and that employees are treated during employment without regard to their race, creed, color or national origin" (Reel 24, Frame 0182). Over the next two years, the U.S. Department of Labor's Office of Federal Contract Compliance (OFCC) gradually worked out a system that required contractors to meet certain numerical goals in hiring minority workers. In 1967 in Cleveland, Ohio, the OFCC adopted minority hiring "goals" for all federal construction in Cleveland. These goals became known as the Cleveland Plan. Later that same year, a similar plan was adopted in Philadelphia. The so-called Philadelphia Plan required "meaningful minority group representation in all trades" and "adopted manning tables (specific goals)" as the method of ensuring that enough minority workers were hired (Reel 24, Frame 0176). In 1968, however, U.S. Comptroller General Elmer B. Staats ruled that the Philadelphia Plan "violated the principles of competitive bidding" (Reel 24, Frame 0124). To combat Staats's ruling, in June and again in September 1969, Assistant Secretary of Labor Arthur A. Fletcher issued two orders revising the Philadelphia Plan. These new orders set ranges for the percentage of minority employment in various construction trades. In January 1970, the Contractors Association of Eastern Pennsylvania sued the secretary of labor, arguing that the revised Philadelphia Plan violated Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The contractors lost at the district court level and in the U.S. Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court refused to hear the case. The files in this edition include background information collected by the NAACP, the decision by Judge William Hastie in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, and the NAACP's amicus curiae brief supporting the Philadelphia Plan.

While the contractors case marked a victory for affirmative action programs, these programs were dealt a setback in two cases relating to employment discrimination by the Philadelphia Police Department. In Commonwealth v. O'Neill and Commonwealth v. Rizzo, the commonwealth of Pennsylvania and twelve unsuccessful African American applicants for employment with the Philadelphia Police Department challenged the written examination and a background investigation that were part of the department's hiring process. The plaintiffs argued that the written examination administered by the department discriminated against African Americans and was not related to job performance. Whites passed the exam at twice the rate of African Americans. The plaintiffs also argued that the background investigation considered "illegitimate factors," such as "prior contacts with the police department not leading to arrest or conviction," juvenile records, and hearsay evidence to deny jobs to African American applicants. Further, the Philadelphia Inquirer discovered that, between 1967 and 1970, former police commissioner Frank L. Rizzo had approved the hiring of twenty white applicants "deemed unfit by investigators" (Reel 23, Frame 0411). As a result of these practices, the proportion of African American police officers dropped from 25 percent in 1966 to under 20 percent in 1970, and the number of African American recruits accepted fell from 30 percent in 1966 to less than 8 percent in 1970. District Court Judge John P. Fullam declared that the Philadelphia Police Department had to hire one African American for every two whites. On appeal, however, Fullam's decision was reversed by the U.S. Court of Appeals.

This edition includes several other employment discrimination cases from Pennsylvania, as well as cases from Connecticut, the District of Columbia, Delaware, New Jersey, and Rhode Island. The other Pennsylvania cases are Bolden v. Pennsylvania, Commonwealth v. Glickman, Commonwealth v. Sebastian, Erie Human Relations Commission v. Tullio, Farmer v. Philadelphia Electric Co., Goodman v. Lukens Steel Co., Jones v. United Gas Improvement Corp., NAACP v. Pennsylvania Public Utilities Commission, and Walton v. Eaton. The Connecticut cases are Bridgeport Guardians v. Members of the Bridgeport Civil Service Commission and Stallworth v. Park City Hospital, Inc. The Delaware employment discrimination case is Stanton v. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. The cases from the District of Columbia are Harrison v. Butz and NAACP v. District of Columbia Fire Department. Finally, Rhode Island cases are Delgado v. Veterans Administration Hospital and Grace v. M. A. Gammino Construction Co.

School desegregation remained an important issue for the NAACP in the 1960s and 1970s. Three cases in this edition are noteworthy because each raised different issues, illustrating the complexity of school desegregation. Blakely v. Boston represented the first stage in a battle to desegregate Boston's schools that lasted over fifteen years, a battle that, in the mid-1970s, made Boston a symbol of white resistance to school desegregation and busing programs. The Boston case began in the early 1960s when African American parents, joined by the Boston NAACP branch, organized demonstrations against inferior education for their children. In August 1963, the Boston NAACP branch submitted a statement to the Boston School Committee that summarized their reasons for protesting. The statement referred to the Supreme Court's landmark decision in Brown v. Board of Education in which a unanimous court declared that "separate educational facilities are inherently unequal." The Boston NAACP acknowledged that Brown applied to schools deliberately segregated by law but argued:

This historic decision went further to describe in unmistakable language how harmful separation is to Negro children. Unfortunately in our society today, a man's color determines his status. This attitude is reflected in the association made with Negro schools. Thus as the school becomes predominantly Negro, it is viewed as a lower status school. Therefore, it is impossible ... to discuss the educational problems pertaining to Negro pupils in Boston without first attacking the source of these problems ... de facto segregation (Reel 13, Frame 0200).

The Boston School Committee, however, was intransigent. Louise Day Hicks, who would be at the center of the school controversy for the next decade, "dared" the NAACP to sue. Hicks and fellow committee member Joseph Lee even used a favorite tactic of southern segregationists blaming the troubles in Boston on "outside agitators." Hicks also attacked Boston's suburban residents. During a television appearance in February 1964, Hicks cautioned: "Before the people of suburbia pontificate on conditions in the Boston school system, they would do well to make sure that conditions in their own school and communities are not in need of any remedial action" (Reel 13, Frame 0263). In April 1965, the NAACP filed suit against the Boston School Committee demanding an end to segregation in Boston's public schools. This particular case was abandoned after the passage of the Massachusetts Racial Imbalance Law in August 1965, but it was only the start of the busing controversy in Boston.

Meanwhile, in Montclair, New Jersey, several different cases culminated in the mid-1970s in a desegregation battle pitting the Montclair Board of Education against the town's mayor, Peter J. Bonastia, and the Town Commission. As in Boston, the Montclair case grew out of demonstrations by African American parents. In September 1961, African American parents picketed in front of the Glenfield Junior High School protesting against segregation and the inferior education provided to their children. In 1967, in Rice v. Board of Education, the commissioner of education ordered the Montclair Board of Education to devise a school desegregation plan. After several other court cases and political maneuvering, finally, in April 1972, the New Jersey commissioner of education approved the Montclair board's desegregation plan. The plan, which included busing of children, was to be implemented in September 1972. In May 1972, five persons opposed to busing won places on the Montclair Town Commission. One of those five, Peter J. Bonastia, was selected as mayor. Led by Bonastia, the Town Commission tried various ploys to circumvent the busing order. They appealed to the governor of New Jersey to dismiss the state commissioner of education. They also expanded the school board in order to gain a majority that would oppose busing. In March 1973, the Town Commission reduced the school board budget by $150,000, including $50,000 that had been set aside for busing. Board of Education v. Bonastia grew out of this budget cut.

NAACP v. Greater Johnstown School District involved still another issue. In 1970, officials from the Pennsylvania State Department of Education and the Pennsylvania Human Relations Commission ordered the Greater Johnstown School District to devise a plan for ending “racial imbalance” in the Greater Johnstown schools. The Greater Johnstown Board of Education decided to close Washington Elementary School and to bus the school’s African American students to other schools. The NAACP and parents of the students sued the school district, arguing that the plan to close the Washington school was arbitrary and placed “an unjustifiable burden on black students” (Reel 25, Frame 0001). In July 1973, U.S. District Court Judge J. Weber dismissed the case. Weber found that more white students than black students were being bused. He noted that because of factors such as traffic patterns near the school and the poor physical condition of the school, the board’s decision to close Washington Elementary made sense from both an educational and economic perspective.

Other school desegregation cases in this edition are Crumpton v. Chop (Bridgeport, Connecticut); Lumpkin v. Meskill (Hartford, Connecticut); Norwalk CORE v. Norwalk Board of Education (Norwalk, Connecticut); Hobson v. Hansen (Washington, D.C.); Barksdale v. Springfield School Committee (Springfield, Massachusetts); Beaman v. Board of Education (Hackensack, New Jersey); and Elliot v. Board of Education (Neptune Township, New Jersey).

Other interesting cases in this edition include Barber v. Kinsella, NAACP v. New York, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks v. Ingraham, State of New Jersey v. Stokes, and Commonwealth v. Kreischer. Barber v. Kinsella involved the arrest of demonstrators in Hartford, Connecticut. In NAACP v. New York, the U.S. Supreme Court affirmed the decision of the district court denying the NAACP’s right to intervene in a voting rights case. The NAACP v. New York documents include the brief submitted to the court by the NAACP and the Supreme Court’s decision. In Benevolent and Protective Order of the Elks v. Ingraham, the Elks, a private membership organization, were denied a liquor license because they did not accept African Americans as members. In State of New Jersey v. Stokes, John H. Stokes, a teacher at Rahway High School, was on trial for assault and battery on a police officer in connection with demonstrations by Rahway High School students. Commonwealth v. Kreischer was a child custody battle in which the mother of three children lost custody after she married a black man.

This edition of Papers of the NAACP represents the fourth section of legal case files microfilmed by LexisNexis focusing on the period after 1965. Other parts of Papers of the NAACP that contain significant documentation on the NAACP Legal Department are Part 23: Legal Department Case Files, 1956–1965; Part 22: Legal Department Administrative Files; and Supplement to Part 16: Board of Directors File, 1966–1970.

PRINCIPAL CORRESPONDENTS INDEX

The following index is a guide to the major correspondents in this microform publication. The first number after each entry refers to the reel, while the four-digit number following the colon refers to the frame number at which a particular file folder containing correspondence by the person begins. Hence, 6: 0657 refers to the folder that begins at Frame 0657 of Reel 6. By referring to the Reel Index, which constitutes the initial section of this guide, the researcher will find the folder title, inclusive dates, and a list of Major Topics and Principal Correspondents, listed in the order in which they appear on the film.

SUBJECT INDEX

The following index is a guide to the major topics in this microfilm publication. The first number after an entry refers to the reel, while the four-digit number following the colon refers to the frame number at which the subject begins. Hence, 1: 0001 refers to the folder that begins at Frame 0001 of Reel 1. By referring to the Reel Index, which constitutes the initial section of this guide, the researcher will find the folder title, inclusive dates, and a list of Major Topics and Principal Correspondents, listed in the order in which they appear on the film.
