SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

This edition provides background files on the work of the NAACP Board of Directors. It is best used in conjunction with the minutes of meetings of the Board of Directors, which are published as Part 1 of UPA's microfilm collection, Papers of the NAACP. The correspondence, reports, and minutes of committee meetings contained in these background files shed light on both the preparation for and the outcome of board meetings. Many of the most important issues that the NAACP confronted are discussed in these files, and many of the NAACP's most influential leaders are represented. The series is divided between a general chronological correspondence file (Reels 1–4) and a series of committee files (Reels 5–8), which are arranged alphabetically by committee name. Although there are a few letters dating between 1915 and 1918 in the first file of the Correspondence series, the bulk of this body of material begins in 1919. With few exceptions, the Committee series covers only the 1930s.

Correspondence Files

These files touch on a wide range of issues, including administrative politics within the NAACP, the operation of NAACP programs, and the general social and political concerns toward which the NAACP directed its attention. Among the subjects covered are reactions to the D. W. Griffith film, Birth of a Nation, antilynching publicity, antilynching legislative initiatives, segregation in the World War I–era military, the challenge of the black nationalist movement led by Marcus Garvey, the emergence of the militant black socialist leaders A. Philip Randolph and Chandler Owen, efforts to dissociate the NAACP from pacifism and leftist radicalism, and the development of the NAACP legal campaign against restrictive covenants in housing. Most of the background deliberations on social and political issues for the 1930s may be found in the Committee series, described below. Other key topics that run through the Correspondence series are the effort to establish women's auxiliaries of the NAACP, efforts to network the NAACP with churches, soliciting support from white and black celebrities, and cultural events in the African-American community—particularly in Harlem.

Important intra-organizational issues such as fund-raising and branch organization strategies are covered in depth in the Correspondence series. Of note is a 1923 briefing prepared by Mary White Ovington on strategies for developing the NAACP branch network. Regarding funding, the correspondence shows that the NAACP hoped to rely upon the American Fund for Public Service (AFPS) to finance many of its initiatives. The AFPS was established in the early 1920s, and although the NAACP never received the entirety of the funds it sought, the AFPS did provide crucial funding for the campaign against educational discrimination during the depths of the Great Depression. Files documenting the AFPS-NAACP relationship can be located by recourse to the subject index in this user guide. The correspondence also covers many other sources of fund-raising, including membership drives and approaches to individuals. The Finance Committee files discussed below further develop the history of NAACP fund-raising strategies.

The correspondence makes apparent philosophical differences and personal frictions. The resignation of W. E. B. Du Bois in 1934 over his advocacy of black self-determination is one of the most significant moments of conflict. Others include the dispute over whether the NAACP should acquiesce in World War I–era military segregation as the price for obtaining black commissioned officers in the U.S. army, and friction over associating the NAACP with leftist and pacifist leaders in the immediate post–World War I era. A sharp letter of protest by Du Bois and other national staff members in March 1931 displays resentment over the administrative style of Executive Secretary Walter F. White. The files also reveal factional fights in local branches (notably in the District of Columbia branch) and differences of opinion about anti-Semitism in the black community during the 1930s.

The key figure in the series until 1932 is Board Chairman Mary White Ovington. After 1932, Walter F. White, although not a board member, is the central figure in the Correspondence series. Also represented in the correspondence is a large number of prominent NAACP board members, including Jane Addams, William English Walling, W. E. B. Du Bois, Rev. John Haynes Holmes, Archibald Grimké, Charles Edward Russell, and Dean George W. Cook. Along with Addams and Ovington, other female board members are well represented, including Florence Kelley, Nannie Helen Burroughs, Rachel Davis Du Bois, and Ella Rush Murray. Murray was especially forceful in bringing women's issues to the attention of the board, including a proposal to establish a Women's National Committee of the NAACP in 1923. Several female staff members are also conspicuous in the Correspondence series, including Richetta Randolph, Daisy Lampkin, and Juanita Jackson. The subject index provides listings for each correspondent.

In addition to providing insights into the style, personalities, and political orientation of NAACP board members, the Correspondence series also provides a fair amount of other biographical information. Some of this appears in discussions about individual candidates for the Board of Directors; more of it can be gleaned from obituaries of board members, which become common in the Correspondence series by the late 1920s.

After 1930, the Correspondence series becomes largely a personal file of Executive Secretary Walter F. White on matters pertaining to the board. For the 1930s, the working files of the Board of Directors are concentrated in the Committee series, a description of which follows.

Committee Files

The records of NAACP committees become substantial beginning in the late 1920s. Indeed, only the records of the Budget and Nominating committees antedate this period, the committee structure of the Board of Directors having been mostly undeveloped until the turn of the decade. The fullness of the Committee files during the 1920s and the 1930s is reflected in the fact that the Correspondence files of the board during this period are somewhat intermittent in covering key topics affecting the association. On the other hand, the Committee files for this period provide a very full account of NAACP strategic deliberations and administration.

Administration Committee. This committee provided oversight for the operation of the national program and the national office. Reports to this committee provide a wealth of detail on the day-to-day activities of the NAACP national office in the 1930s. The reports cover fund-raising activities, public relations strategies, membership and recruitment strategies, personnel decisions at the national office, and responses to the steady stream of events during the 1930s with an impact on race relations—lynchings, racially derogatory messages in the mass media, New Deal legislation, the emergence of competing civil rights organizations, and more. These files are an essential source for understanding the operation of the NAACP national office between 1929 and 1939.

Budget Committee, 1920–1921 and 1928–1939. Only a few pieces of this committee's correspondence survive for the early 1920s. The substantive records begin in 1930. Records include breakdowns of membership dues from individual NAACP branches, monthly statements of general expenses (including the salaries of all national staff members), and reports on the result of fund-raising campaigns. The deteriorating financial base of The Crisis during the early 1930s is also a recurrent topic.

Constitution Committee, 1936–1937. This was a temporary committee charged with drafting revisions to the NAACP Constitution in accordance with the Report of the Committee on Future Plan and Program adopted by the NAACP in 1935. (See the Plan and Program Committee files below.) The general goals of the revisions were to reorient the NAACP more toward a working-class perspective and to grant more internal power to the general membership via the Annual Conference. The file includes background correspondence and several draft revisions.

Crisis Committee, 1936. This committee was not formed by the Board of Directors but seems rather to have been a voluntary association formed by female NAACP leaders in New York City to raise money to supplement the declining income of The Crisis magazine.

Finance Committee, 1932–1939. This committee was formed as an emergency measure to help counteract the impact of the depression on NAACP fund-raising. Originally, the committee undertook a program based upon the sale of securities from an estate that had been willed to the NAACP by a wealthy donor. However, it progressed from the securities sale to several other fund-raising schemes, including applications for foundation grants, solicitations of wealthy sympathizers, celebrity benefit performances, and other activities. Committee minutes and reports contained in this file provide a detailed overview of measures taken to maintain the solvency of the NAACP during the 1930s.

Legal Committee, 1931–1939. This file documents the deliberations of the NAACP's National Legal Committee. This committee, which never met as a body but whose membership provided substantial prestige to the association, was established much earlier than 1931, when the file begins. It had been composed of prominent members of the American Bar Association and the legal profession. With few exceptions, the older generation of National Legal Committee members were Caucasian, including American Bar Association President Moorfield Storey, Harvard Professor Felix Frankfurter, trial lawyer Clarence Darrow, and Jewish leader Louis Marshall. An important development, which is reflected in the file beginning in 1932, was the concerted effort to recruit African-American lawyers for the Legal Committee. In addition, scattered committee minutes and reports discuss the course of several of the NAACP's most important legal cases starting in 1933. The discussions report on the progress of the litigation and advance ideas about strategy.

National Advisory Committee, 1933–1934. This file documents an NAACP effort to establish a board of advisors consisting of "prominent persons throughout the country" to whom the association would turn in "important crises." The file consists mostly of lists of prospective members and letters of invitation to join the committee.

Nominating Committee, 1922-1939. This committee searched for individuals to recommend as candidates for the Board of Directors. Board members were elected at the NAACP annual business meetings in January of each year from a slate of candidates proposed by the Nominating Committee. The files contain numerous lists of candidates along with correspondence regarding board candidates. The records shed important light on the self-perpetuating organizational policies of the NAACP Board of Directors. Factions and political differences within the board are sometimes apparent in disagreements over nominations. There are also bits of biographical information on prospective or current board members. Like the Legal Committee, the Board of Directors evolved from a mostly Caucasian composition to an African-American majority during the period covered by the file. Of note also are the assertive efforts of local NAACP leaders for a greater voice on the Board of Directors during the 1930s. These local protests against the centralized control of the Board included Sidney Redmond of Jackson, Mississippi, A. T. Walden of Atlanta, Roscoe Dunjee of Oklahoma City, L. Pearl Mitchell of Baltimore, and Irvin Mollison of Chicago.

Plan and Program Committee. The Committee on the Future Plan and Program of the NAACP, as this committee was formally known, was formed during a depression-inspired era of soul-searching within the NAACP. The NAACP's traditional reliance on a strategy of legal redress and legislative reform was questioned by many board members during the early years of the depression. This committee was established to mark out a new direction appropriate to the times. The preliminary report of the committee recommended that the association take more of a labor- and economic-oriented course of action. The report can be found in the July–August 1934 folder at frame 0644 of Reel 8. Subsequent files on Reel 8 include proposed revisions to the report and background correspondence and memoranda. The final report appears on frame 0838 of Reel 8. The background correspondence between Walter White and Abram Harris shows that the association was in part motivated to prevent the NAACP from being outflanked by rival civil rights organizations on the left. The files show that the NAACP Board of Directors was sharply divided between those determined to stay the traditional course and those determined to transform the NAACP into a working-class oriented organization. Some of the material also touches upon the resignation of W. E. B. Du Bois from the NAACP and disagreements over the control of The Crisis.

NOTE ON SOURCES

All documents reproduced for this edition are held by the Manuscripts Division of the Library of Congress, Washington, D.C. The original NAACP collection at the Library of Congress is subdivided into four accession groups: Group I, 1909–1939; Group II, 1940–1955; Group III, 1956–1965; and Group IV, 1966–1975. The records making up Part 16, Series A of this publication are drawn exclusively from Group I, Series A, Board of Directors File.

EDITORIAL NOTE

This edition was compiled after a thorough survey by Professors August Meier and John H. Bracey, Jr. of the second accession of the NAACP collection of the Library of Congress. Every file selected for inclusion has been microfilmed in its entirety.
