INTRODUCTION

Foreign policy and its resultant crises were foremost in the minds of Soviet government officials during the early 1960s. Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev focused heavily on the issue of increasing the strength and international position of the USSR, particularly in Europe and the newly independent countries of the old colonial empires. Supported by A. I. Mikoyan and Marshal Zhukov, Khrushchev solidified his control over the fortunes of the Soviet people throughout the late 1950s and into the early 1960s. During this time, Khrushchev encouraged exchanges with the West and supported the idea of peaceful coexistence; gone was the old Soviet belief that war was inevitable between countries with different political systems.

Khrushchev and the Soviet government at this time were not lacking in contradictions. Support of the peaceful coexistence doctrine and support of “national liberation movements” aimed at toppling established governments were both prevalent in the early 1960s. While Khrushchev was aware of the destructiveness of nuclear weapons, he nevertheless supported their production over conventional weaponry and refused to seriously negotiate a worldwide ban on the testing of new weapons. Following the pattern of Soviet foreign policy since 1917, the “eyes” of the USSR were on Central Europe, particularly Germany. Throughout his tenure, Khrushchev supported and/or bullied Eastern Europe—East Germany and the Berlin situation prevailed as the most important European issue during this time. Khrushchev’s contradictions and vacillating beliefs were bound to affect East-West relations, particularly U.S.–Soviet relations. The high points and low points in his tenure at the Soviet helm seemed to always involve the United States.

U.S.–Soviet Relations

Although Democrats had criticized Republican handling of foreign affairs, they found no easy path of their own through the jungle of world politics in the opening years of the 1960s. Following the caretaker secretary of state, Christian Herter, the Kennedy-selected Dean Rusk tried to impress upon both the Soviet rival and North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) allies, in speeches and diplomatic notes, that the American government was now in more vigorous hands. The United States continued to oppose the extension of Soviet power by granting aid to those nations willing to resist Communist threats and blandishments and by strengthening the defensive alliances and bases around the periphery of the Communist bloc. The USSR and the United States both professed a desire to ease tensions and to negotiate disarmament and nuclear test ban treaties, resolve the Berlin and Germany problem, and increase the acceptance of peaceful coexistence. They failed to agree except on minor issues, and the alarming nuclear arms race continued, culminating in the Cuban missile crisis.

Following the “era of good feeling,” when Soviet Premier Khrushchev visited the United States in 1959, the stage was set for a potentially successful summit in Paris in May 1960. But the optimism surrounding the belief that the Paris summit would solve the Berlin and East Germany situation proved unfounded. Khrushchev in a number of exhortations maintained the Soviet desire to sign a separate peace treaty with East Germany, whose government would have jurisdiction over Berlin. U.S. and Allied statements continued to defend rights in Berlin and advocate the strengthening of NATO, including West Germany. But the Paris summit was further undermined by the Soviet shooting down of a U-2 spy plane piloted by Francis Gary Powers. After various excuses from the U.S. government and Soviet condemnation of the incident, President Eisenhower accepted full responsibility for the spying with the statement that it was necessary in order to prevent “another Pearl Harbor.” The Soviet government continued to severely denounce these “aggressive acts.” Khrushchev threatened those countries allowing the United States access in order to spy on the USSR, but Eisenhower countered by increasing military aid to U.S. allies worldwide.

Such was the atmosphere at the time the Paris summit was scheduled to open. Khrushchev’s double-talk, on the one hand confessing his desire for world peace and on the other demonstrating his unwillingness to compromise, led to the failure of the summit. The rising temper of the Soviet government was apparent in Khrushchev’s bitter address to the United Nations (UN) in September. His condemnation of the United States reached its climax with his declaration that he would have “nothing to do with President Eisenhower as long as he was president.” Khrushchev’s display at the UN, accentuated by his banging of one of his shoes on the podium, gave warning to the world that the USSR was closing the missile gap with the United States. The Eisenhower administration’s efforts to solve the issues of Berlin and Germany and to reduce tensions in Europe ended in failure. These issues would once again rise to the forefront and become major concerns of the newly elected President John F. Kennedy.

In early 1961, President Kennedy and Premier Khrushchev moved rapidly to reopen the high-level direct dialogue begun under Eisenhower and to repair the damage done to U.S.–Soviet relations by the U-2 incident. In January 1961, Khrushchev offered to release the two U.S. airmen detained by Soviet authorities since their aircraft was downed in July 1960. Kennedy was asked in return to ensure that the United States would not resume overflights of Soviet territory and to indicate his interest in improved U.S.–Soviet relations. Secretary of State Dean Rusk counseled his staff, however, not to “encourage the thinking that a new dawn is rising in relations with the Soviet Union.”

U.S. policymakers conducted a general review of Soviet affairs at a White House meeting on February 11. There was agreement that Khrushchev wanted a period of calm in foreign affairs to gain time to make economic progress at home. He was not likely to bring to a boil the simmering Berlin issue but might do so if there was a breakdown of negotiations on disarmament or a flare-up in a trouble spot such as Laos. But Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko told Secretary Rusk in March that the status of West Berlin was an issue that “brooks no delay.” Ambassador Llewellyn Thompson met with Soviet First Deputy Foreign Minister Vasiliy Kuznetsov and found the depth of Soviet suspicions “incredible.” In particular, Khrushchev alleged that the United States was stalling on arms limitation talks in order to build up its military capability.

While U.S. policymakers focused on potential flash points around the world in U.S.–Soviet relations, they also sought to make progress on bilateral issues. In several memoranda sent during February, Secretary Rusk briefed the president on the latest efforts to expand exchanges, negotiate an air transport agreement, and eliminate the ban on the importation of Soviet crab meat, the latter an action that Rusk encouraged to give “tangible demonstration” of the U.S. desire to improve relations with the Soviets. But in conversations with Soviet leaders, both Rusk and Ambassador Thompson observed that strictly bilateral issues were less important and relatively simple compared to the difficult U.S.–Soviet problems involving relationships with other countries.

Discussion of a proposed informal meeting between Kennedy and Khrushchev dated from the beginning of the Kennedy administration. Kennedy broached the issue with Khrushchev in February, and Khrushchev indicated an inclination to accept. In early May, Ambassador Thompson urged the president to carry through with the meeting to further his policy of recognizing the basic conflict of interest between the two powers but endeavoring to avoid or minimize a military confrontation. Analysts in the State Department and the embassy in Moscow believed that Khrushchev wanted the meeting to be a relatively pleasant one that would end on a note of accord and promote an atmosphere of détente.

Khrushchev, however, tested Kennedy at the Vienna summit in June 1961, trying to exert pressure on the new American president and to secure concessions from him. Khrushchev told Kennedy that the Soviet Union would alone sign a peace treaty with the German Democratic Republic (GDR) in December and that the Western rights of access to Berlin would expire if the United States refused an interim agreement that would last six months and culminate in the withdrawal of Western forces from West Berlin. Kennedy replied that if the United States were to accept a loss of its rights of access to Berlin, no one would have any confidence in U.S. commitments and pledges. The two leaders also clashed over wars of liberation, Taiwan, and a nuclear test ban, with Khrushchev charging that test ban controls proposed by the United States would prejudice Soviet military security. In retrospect, the summit was viewed as significant for its agreement on Laos.

Discord at the Vienna summit intensified the fierce ideological struggle between the two nations. Secretary Rusk and U.S. Information Agency Director Edward R. Murrow suggested to Kennedy that the phrase “peaceful world community” be used as a countertheme to the Soviet Union’s “peaceful coexistence.” Rusk told the State Department’s Policy Planning Council that Khrushchev’s January 6 speech to Communist Party of the Soviet Union (CPSU) intellectuals gave the United States ample ammunition to convince world audiences that the Sino-Soviet bloc had declared war on the United States and practically everyone else. At the same time, U.S. policymakers looked for measures to avoid a war erupting by mischance over Berlin or elsewhere.

The tension over Berlin continued to mount throughout the summer of 1961. Khrushchev’s son-in-law, A. I. Adzhubei, called on Kennedy at the White House in late June and again in November, and Ambassador Mikhail Menshikov had a meeting in September. Both men found Kennedy firm on maintaining the U.S. position in Berlin. The crisis deepened when, on August 13, 1961, the GDR prevented its citizens from entering West Berlin and started to erect what became the “Berlin Wall,” making the division of Berlin into two separate cities virtually complete.

President Kennedy decided that the Berlin crisis ruled out the signing of the bilateral air agreement that U.S. and Soviet delegations had negotiated during July and August 1961, and he told Indonesian President Achmed Sukarno in September that if the Soviets signed a separate peace treaty with the GDR resulting in interference with access to Germany, “then we could have a war before Christmas.” Unexpectedly, Khrushchev lifted his deadline for a separate German peace treaty in the midst of the CPSU’s twenty-second Congress in October 1961. But the State Department’s assessment of the twenty-second Congress gave notice that the USSR’s determination to achieve its objectives remained “undiluted,” and “the West must anticipate a continuous application of pressure on sensitive issues and, particularly, must prepare for an increased communist drive in the underdeveloped areas.”

Despite the tensions over Berlin, the two countries took several steps toward improving bilateral relations in early 1962. U.S. and Soviet officials had met on several occasions during 1961 to discuss a new and expanded exchanges agreement to cover 1962 through 1963. Negotiations began in earnest in January 1962. The Soviet delegation sought increased scientific and industrial exchanges while the U.S. delegation wanted more exchanges in the educational and informational fields. Expanded trade, including the export of U.S. grain, was explored. The new agreement was signed on March 8. That same month talks began with the Soviet government on cooperation in space exploration. In April, Secretary Rusk recommended to Kennedy that travel restrictions on Soviet visitors to the United States, in effect since 1952, be lifted, and Kennedy approved the change. But U.S.–Soviet efforts to arrange a television show in March, at which each leader would appear on film, came to naught when the Soviets cancelled the plan following the president's announcement of the resumption of nuclear testing in the atmosphere.

President Kennedy's March 1962 decision to resume atmospheric testing followed a similar decision by the Soviets the previous August and reflected the failure of disarmament talks in Geneva to make significant headway. In a May 1962 estimate, the intelligence community charged that Soviet agitation for disarmament was, and would continue to be, aimed "at political exploitation and the imposition of restraints upon their opponents rather than at agreements on terms which the West would find acceptable." Moreover, the Soviets would "almost certainly continue to resist the inspection features of Western test ban proposals." Khrushchev confirmed this suspicion a few days later, during the informal and friendly visit with Khrushchev and his family by the president's press secretary, Pierre Salinger, and presidential adviser, Theodore Sorensen, that the Soviet Union would never tolerate inspection posts on its territory.

The U.S. intelligence community's May estimate was no more sanguine about Berlin, stating that it was highly unlikely that during the next few years the Soviets would come to regard Berlin as an issue to be settled by a compromise that stopped short of incorporating the western half of the city into East Germany. Following a two-hour discussion with Khrushchev in July, however, Ambassador Thompson reported that he was more convinced than ever that at least Khrushchev did not intend to push the Berlin question to the point of a real risk of war. Much would depend upon the attitude of Khrushchev's colleagues and allies as well as upon how the United States handled the issue. Policy makers on both sides welcomed the signing of a settlement over Laos in Geneva on July 23, 1962.

Concern about the USSR's motives in Cuba escalated during the summer of 1962 and presaged a major crisis. Director of Central Intelligence John McCone warned at an August meeting that Moscow would not let the Castro regime fail and, to prevent its failure, would install medium-range ballistic missiles in Cuba. At an advisory meeting in Secretary Rusk's office on August 21, McCone reported new information on the accelerated Soviet supply of aid to Cuba and the possible construction of missile sites that provoked "general agreement that the situation was critical." When U.S.

reconnaissance aircraft confirmed the existence of Soviet offensive missile sites on the island in mid-October, the most dangerous U.S.–Soviet confrontation during the cold war ensued.

The resolution of the Cuban missile crisis prompted an extended reassessment of Soviet foreign policy and long-term U.S.–Soviet relations. Rusk confided to British Ambassador David Ormsby-Gore in November that “we just don’t know what they will do”; while the Soviets might undertake a crash program to build up their nuclear strength, they might also become more serious about disarmament. Central Intelligence Agency analysts thought Moscow would choose one path or the other, but State Department analysts contended that, as in the past, the Soviets would pursue both paths, building up their arms while pursuing their objectives through negotiation. Neither group expected a decisive change in the nature of the contest between the two countries. Kennedy nonetheless told Khrushchev’s close associate Anastas Mikoyan in November 1962 that Moscow should “abandon the belief that it is its job to kindle revolutionary fires all over the world,” and ambassador-at-large Chester Bowles made a similar point to Soviet Ambassador Dobrynin. In early 1963, U.S. intelligence and diplomatic officials remained wary of how Khrushchev would respond to his setback in Cuba.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

Confidential U.S. State Department Central Files, 1960–1966

The U.S. State Department Central Files are the definitive source of American diplomatic reporting on political, military, social, and economic developments throughout the world in the twentieth century. Surpassing the scope of the State Department's Foreign Relations of the United States (FRUS) series, the Central Files for a country provide the researcher extensive coverage of all political, military, social, and economic matters relating to that particular country and/or world event.

The publication of the State Department Central Files for 1960–1966 offers unique opportunities for undergraduate and graduate research. These vast, invaluable, and recently released internal records for most countries are available for a crucial period in U.S. and world history. Each part of the 1960–1966 series will contain a wide range of primary materials: special reports and observations on political and military affairs; studies and statistics on socioeconomic matters; interviews and minutes of meetings with U.S. and foreign government officials and leaders; legal and claims documentation; full texts of important letters and cables sent and received by U.S. diplomats and embassy personnel; reports, news clippings, and translations from journals and newspapers; and countless high-level/head of state government documents, including speeches, memoranda, official reports, aide-memoiré, and transcripts of political meetings and assemblies.

In addition, access to these records will stimulate new insights into the evolution of American foreign policy toward both allies and adversaries and into the shaping of the policies of these countries toward the United States as well. Of even greater importance for the study of individual countries is the comprehensive manner in which the Central Files illuminate the internal affairs of foreign countries. There are thousands of pages arranged topically and chronologically on crucial subjects: political parties, unrest and revolution, human rights, government administration, fiscal and monetary issues, labor, housing, police and crime, public health and works, national defense, military equipment and supplies, foreign policy making, wars and alliances, education, religion, culture, trade, industry, and natural resources. On these subjects and more, the Central Files offer authoritative, in-depth, and timely documentation and analysis that cannot be matched.

This convenient microform edition can be used by scholars throughout the world. Easy and immediate access to these records will provide many new insights into how pivotal nations have shaped their policies toward the United States and other nations. Of even greater importance, the records illuminate the internal conditions of these nations in exhaustive detail by reproducing thousands of pages on political, governmental, and military affairs as well as economic and social issues. It is this kind of documentation—official, in-depth, and on crucial topics—that makes the State Department's Central Files essential for research.

SOURCE NOTE

Microfilmed from the holdings of the National Archives, College Park, MD, Record Group 59: Records of the Department of State, Central Decimal Files, decimal numbers 661 (foreign affairs) and 611.61 (U.S.–USSR foreign affairs) for the period 1960–January 1963. In addition, decimal number 611.61B (U.S.–Ukraine) has been included. All available original documents have been microfilmed. The documents reproduced in this publication are among the records of the U.S. Department of State in the custody of the National Archives of the United States. No copyright is claimed in these official records.

ORGANIZATION OF THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF STATE DECIMAL FILING SYSTEM

From 1910 to 1963 the Department of State used a decimal classification system to organize its Central Files. This system assembled and arranged individual documents according to their subject, with each subject having a specific decimal code. The decimal system from 1950 to January 1963 consists of ten primary classifications numbered 0 through 9, each covering a broad subject area.

CLASS 0: Miscellaneous.

CLASS 1: Administration of the United States Government.

CLASS 2: Protection of Interests (Persons and Property).

CLASS 3: International Conferences, Congresses, Meetings, and Organizations.

CLASS 4: International Trade and Commerce. Trade Relations. Customs Administration.

CLASS 5: International Informational and Educational Relations. Cultural Affairs. Psychological Warfare.

CLASS 6: International Political Relations. Bilateral Treaties.

CLASS 7: Internal Political and National Defense Affairs.

CLASS 8: Internal Economic, Industrial, and Social Affairs.

CLASS 9: Other Internal Affairs. Communications. Transportation. Science.

For this section of the U.S. State Department Central Files, UPA has microfilmed the documents contained in Class 6. Within this class, each subject is defined by a decimal file number. The decimal file number is followed by a slant mark (/). The number after the slant mark (/) refers to the date on which the document was generated. Documents within each decimal file number are arranged in chronological order. The entire decimal file number is stamped on the right side of the first page of every document.

In this publication, records classified 661 deal with the foreign policy of the USSR and its political relations with other nations. Due to the State Department's arrangement of these records, countries assigned numbers below 61 will not be found in this file. [Several misfiled documents from country numbers 51h, 51k, 51s, and 60e have been included.] UPA has included files dealing with the political relations between the United States (country number 11) and the USSR in this publication, however. In order to find the political relations between the USSR and countries other than the United States that have a lower number than 61, the researcher should check the CLASS 6 records for that country. These records can either be found at the National Archives, College Park, Maryland, or, for many countries, in microform publications that UPA has made available to libraries.

In a small number of instances, documents were assigned erroneous or incomplete decimal numbers. UPA has included, in brackets, corrected decimal entries. In addition, misfiled decimal number documents have also been included in brackets.

CLASS 6. Example, 661.62A/1-2062

661.62A/1-2062 indicates a document dated August 20, 1962, relating to the bilateral relations between the USSR (61) and West Germany (62A).

CLASS 6. Example, 611.61/12-260

611.61/12-260 indicates a document dated January 2, 1960, relating to the bilateral relations between the United States of America (11) and the USSR (61).

Note: For the convenience of the researcher, wherever the pages represented by a specific classification number total more than one hundred, a breakdown of the material by month and year is provided. When applicable, major subjects have been included with the month and year breakdown.

SUBJECT INDEX

The following index is a guide to the major topics in this microform publication. The first number after each subentry refers to the reel, while the four-digit number following the colon refers to the frame number at which the subject begins. Hence, 6: 0583 directs the researcher to frame 0583 of Reel 6. By referring to the Reel Index, which constitutes the initial segment of this guide, the researcher will find topics arranged in the order in which they appear on the film. In order to avoid confusion, the term "foreign relations" has been substituted for the State Department's term "Political Relations." Researchers should consult the acronym list on page xxix.
