INTRODUCTION

Eleanor Roosevelt confronted more than sadness when Franklin Delano Roosevelt died on April 12, 1945. She had to deal with the vast outpouring of condolences from citizens and leaders around the world, the legal intricacies involved in closing her husband's estate, and the imbrolios surrounding the placement and design of a memorial to FDR. She had to assess her own financial health, decide whether or not she should accept a congressional pension, make a home of her own, and decide how she would live her life alone. At the same time, she knew that she was now the symbol of the Roosevelt legacy and would be called upon to represent the policies and hopes associated with the Roosevelt administration.

And perhaps most important, she faced one of the biggest challenges of her political life—how to continue to influence American politics and diplomacy when she no longer had the White House for a platform or a variety of executive branch staff members sympathetic to her viewpoints and predisposed to act upon her requests.

The documents reproduced on the nineteen reels included in this collection reveal how she addressed these often conflicting pressures. These documents are the record Eleanor Roosevelt left to the Franklin D. Roosevelt Presidential Library and represent her legacy to the nation's archive. The letters, reports, news clippings, articles, memoranda, cards, and telegrams reproduced here provide one of the greatest (albeit incomplete) written records of Eleanor Roosevelt's work and the public reaction to it. They show us the tremendous amount of requests she received from the general public—for help with financial matters, job placement, and immigration visas; for advice on how to deal with family issues, personal problems, and business opportunities; for recommendations on colleges and professional schools; and heartfelt solicitations for endorsements, contributions, and public statements on a variety of public and private matters. Also included are letters she received from the general public reacting to positions she promoted in her "My Day" columns, aired during interviews, or expressed in speeches.

As the guide to the microfilm details, the correspondence is filed in alphabetical order and arranged chronologically within each folder. If ER responded to correspondence, frequently her correspondence leads the packet, with the incoming material eliciting the correspondence immediately following.

Yet readers should be cautioned that many of Eleanor Roosevelt's responses are missing from this collection. In 1945, the remarkably efficient Malvina ("Tommy") Thompson provided Eleanor Roosevelt's only full-time secretarial assistance. Such a small personal staff, no matter how devoted and resourceful, could not keep track of the huge mountains of material their boss received and generated. Consequently, carbon copies were not kept for every typed outgoing letter nor were copies made of outgoing handwritten material. Often the only indication of Eleanor Roosevelt's response to the material are almost illegible notes jotted in the margins or drafts of points she dictated to Thompson that were then placed in the file. Nevertheless, the collection is a rich resource for anyone interested in the early postwar years and how Eleanor Roosevelt responded to the personal and professional challenges 1945, 1946, and 1947 presented her.¹

The same frenzied pace affected the filing of documents. Sometimes material is filed under the name of the author, other times under the name of the organization the author represented. Readers interested in Walter White, for example, should also check files for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Southern Conference on Human Welfare, and other civil rights organizations, as well as the file for Columbia, Tennessee. If Eleanor Roosevelt forwarded the letter to another person or agency and had that letter returned, the document could just as often be filed under the name of the third party who read and returned it. In short, anyone who uses this material must cast a wide net to find all material relevant to their interests.

Eleanor Roosevelt began her “years alone” allocating her husband’s possessions to the Roosevelt Library and distributing specifically willed items to her children and colleagues. As her correspondence with Felix Frankfurter, Esther Lape, Estes Kefauver, and Basil O’Connor details, she tried to balance congressional wishes to commemorate her husband’s legacy against his specific desires for a simple memorial placed outside the National Archives. Her correspondence with Harold Ickes reveals her efforts to support the library and museum, the legal procedures necessary to turn her husband’s family home over to the government, and her reluctance to engage in any grand memorial decisions until the estate had been settled. She debated whether or not to accept a federal pension and how to manage her income with family attorney Henry Hooker.

She also kept a sharp eye on American politics and diplomacy. Her letters to her aunt Maude Gray and Secretary of State Edward Stettinius express her concerns as to how the San Francisco conference, charged with creating the United Nations, handled the seating of delegates, especially those for Poland and Argentina. Letters to Mary McLeod Bethune, W. E. B. Du Bois, and Walter White respond to their proposals suggesting ways the American delegation could address racial discrimination and establish a just protocol for the United Nations Economic and Social Council (UNESCO) to follow. She exchanged letters with Bernard Baruch on matters ranging from the disarmament of Germany to regulation of atomic energy to the financial backing of individual congressional candidates.

Nor did ER limit her concern to the development of the United Nations, Truman’s decisions at Potsdam, and the bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. She supported the Freeland League and George Marshall’s efforts on behalf of prisoners of war. When FDR’s correspondence with King Ibn Saud was released, she argued forcefully that the president neither abandoned Jewish desires for a homeland nor engaged in diplomatic duplicity. And as she watched Stalin continue the Soviet advance, correspondence with both famous and average Americans depicted her gradual movement into the cold war camp.

The correspondence in this collection reveals how persistent her attention to domestic politics and policy was.² ER corresponded with labor leaders David Dubinsky, Walter Reuther, and Rose Schneiderman about wage and price controls, strikes and the hardships they imposed on striking workers, inflation, and the Equal Rights Amendment. Her correspondence with Democratic Party leader Ed Flynn detailed her desire to unite completely unattached liberals and Republicans with the state party and also detailed her fierce opposition to third-party candidates at all levels (even in mayoral elections). Her early correspondence with Henry Wallace encouraged him to carry the New Deal's banner in the Truman administration. Her devotion to a Democratic victory is even more detailed in her letter to Robert Hannegan in which she argued that large margins of victory in New York City elections were essential to blocking a Thomas Dewey victory in 1946 and 1948. Her steady comments encouraged allies (Harold Ickes, Sidney Hillman, C. B. Baldwin) to attempt to draft her for a variety of political offices, all of which she firmly refused.

There are dozens of letters to "average citizens" discussing Russian aggression, Spain, Jewish immigration to Palestine, civil rights, and labor issues. In short, by the time Harry Truman appointed ER to the first American delegation to the United Nations in December 1945, she had returned to the political and diplomatic problems she addressed while living in the White House.

The year 1946 presented Eleanor Roosevelt with a new challenge—how to balance her interest in domestic policy and partisan politics with her diplomatic responsibilities to the United Nations. Although she increasingly used her "My Day" column as her political voice on domestic issues, her correspondence with prominent individuals—Bishop William Scarlett on "The Negro Question," Attorney General Tom Clark on conscientious objectors, Chief Swimming Eel on Native American concerns, Congresswoman Helen Gahagan Douglas on labor and housing concerns, and playwright George Bernard Shaw on women's rights—shows how ER worked behind the scenes to mediate political disputes and inform political leaders of the positions she hoped they would adopt. Documentation from Mary McLeod Bethune, Tom Clark, and Walter White traces her strong support for the NAACP's investigation of the race riot in Columbia, Tennessee. But just as important, the 1946 paper trail also documents her involvement (on a variety of levels) with organizations whose values she championed: Bethune-Cookman College, the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, the NAACP, the President's Commission on Higher Education, the Union for Democratic Action, and the Wiltwyck School, to cite just a few.

ER's correspondence with average citizens increased in 1946. She often replied to citizens who wrote her in urgent tones asking for help, often lending her name to their requests, as she did when she wrote President Truman urging him to meet with E. M. Wallrath whose son (who was stationed in Japan) had been condemned to death for desertion. As responses to Peggie Wingard and General George Van Horn Moseley indicate, sometimes she even responded to bigotry in a temperate, patient manner, believing, perhaps, that the best way to expose her correspondent's irrationality was to address them as if they were rational.

Although the vast majority of documents relating to ER's United Nations work have been filmed for a different part of this series (Papers of Eleanor Roosevelt from the FDR Library on the United Nations, 1945–1962, Part 1: United Nations Correspondence and Publications, 1945–1952), users will find a rich repository of material to supplement that collection. ER discussed the International Refugee Organization with Ed Flynn, the structure of the United Nations with George Marshall, the need to develop strong popular support for the United Nations with Chester Bowles, and the need to appoint an English-speaking woman to the UN Commission on the Status of Women with Carrie Chapman Catt and Dorothy Kenyon. Indeed, the UN dominates her correspondence with Bernard Baruch as they evaluated Henry Wallace's proposal for regulating the atomic bomb, the Baruch Plan for international control of atomic energy, various proposals to rebuild the German and British economies, and the difficulties James Byrnes presented both to the delegation and the United Nations itself. On a more personal note, her correspondence with Elinor Morgenthau shows ER's initial impression of the senatorial members of the American delegation and her appointment to the Committee on Social, Cultural and Humanitarian Concerns (Committee Three).

Concern for refugees dominates ER's general foreign policy correspondence. She exchanged letters with Jan Masaryk about the issue of restitution for dispossessed Jews and other displaced persons in Czechoslovakia. She asked Ed Flynn to solicit Cardinal Spellman's support (and that of the Roman Catholic Church) for the International Refugee Organization and for the United Nations Emergency Children's Fund. She also wrote Clarence Pickett and others to ask for their support. Although ER disagreed with Lafayette Golestone's Zionist insistence that refugees be granted immediate access to Palestine (arguing that refugees should not be allowed to resettle in Palestine without protection from American and British forces), she argued strongly that substantive material assistance should be given Jewish refugees wherever they were. She criticized Pastor Niemöller's visit to the United States and responded to numerous critics outraged by her opposition.

Material for 1947 reflects the same attention to domestic politics, social policy, the United Nations, and refugee concerns plus the unease with which ER dealt with both red-baiting and American Communism. She praised Americans for Democratic Action as an anti-Communist liberal organization and defended its policy of excluding Communists from its leadership and staff to C. B. Baldwin, Max Lerner, Fiorello La Guardia, Sumner Welles, and Ada Garfinkel. Yet ER's correspondence with Robert Lovett reveals her strong criticism of the State Department's dismissal, without hearings, of ten employees as "security risks," and her letter to A. F. Whitney, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, clearly states her opposition to the Taft-Hartley proposals. ER responded to those who supported Henry Wallace, such as Rev. E. Ralph Wiborg, when they wrote challenging her increasing criticism of Wallace. Such public anticommunist positions did not dissuade her critics, as her correspondence with J. Edgar Hoover about Congressman Clarence Brown's alleged accusations against ER illustrates.

Discrimination continued to rankle ER. She told Mrs. Charles McLean of the American Women's Club of Toronto that she would not be able to keep her speaking engagement because she had been told that the organization discriminated against Jews. She wrote Clara Tree Major that she was resigning from the board of advisers to the Children's Theatre because Major refused to allow integrated audiences. ER engaged in painful correspondence with Walter White over the presentation of the NAACP's petition to the United Nations on American race relations. She argued the Equal Rights Amendment with Josephine Terrill, chairman of the National Woman's Party, saying that energy could be better spent on changing laws discriminating against women in each state. And she took the time to answer questions from a high school student, Beatrice Hauser, about what students could do to promote better race relations in their own community.

The foreign policy documents show continuing concern for refugees and increasing concern for the direction American foreign policy took in 1947. Letters to Dean Acheson note ER's dismay that the United States did not consult the United Nations before it responded to the crisis in Greece. She aired her concerns about American economic assistance to Europe, the plans to control atomic energy, American aid to Greece and Turkey, and Soviet obstructionism to Baruch. ER urged Senators Arthur Vandenberg and Tom Connolly to commit to another term on the American delegation to assure bipartisan representation. She lobbied Secretary of State George Marshall for food aid to Yugoslavia and corresponded with Nat Einhorn, executive director of the American Committee for Yugoslav Relief. ER criticized Henry Wallace's speeches in Europe in correspondence with C. B. Baldwin. She discussed the proposal for American-Soviet control of the Ruhr, plans for European recovery, and the protection of religious freedom in the proposed declaration of human rights with John Foster Dulles. ER even confronted Soviet Ambassador Andrei Gromyko, challenging him to provide material supporting accusations he made in committee and before the general assembly. Finally, she addressed the many letters she received proposing world government, telling her various correspondents that nations were not ready to give up the sovereignty necessary for world government to succeed and that the best course for peace was to strengthen the United Nations.

Palestine occupied a great deal of ER's written record. Her correspondence with George Marshall vigorously criticized American policy on Palestine. She exchanged letters with Freda Kirchwey, president of the Nation, and several others that focused on the future of Palestine. ER asked Senators Robert Wagner and Irving Ives to support continued United States aid to European refugees after funding for the United Nations Refugee Relief Administration ended. She asked state department aide George Warren and Gromyko to make inquiries about Raoul Wallenberg on her behalf. ER asked educator Charl Williams to use her influence to get Parent-Teacher Associations in each state to support the admission of displaced persons into the United States and urged Americans from all walks of life to contribute to the United Jewish Appeal to help Jewish survivors of the war in Europe.

By the end of 1947, Eleanor Roosevelt had cemented her position as a formidable leader in her own right on many fronts—as a party leader, diplomat, columnist, champion of human rights, and touchstone of the New Deal. She grew increasingly confident in her own ability to navigate controversy, partisan politics, and Robert's Rules of Order. These documents reflect the various strategies and language she applied in diplomatic, partisan, and private conversations and thus introduce this woman in all her complexity.

Taken together, these materials give one a sense of what ER's life was like as she began life alone; how she grew as a political leader, journalist, activist, and diplomat; and the conflict she encountered as she publicly charted her own course. Readers, however, are cautioned against relying completely on this collection for their interpretation. While it is a complete record of the documents in the General Correspondence files ER donated to the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library in Hyde Park, New York, it does not include other major collections housed there, nor does it include all copies of her outgoing correspondence. That material is just now being assembled, and interested parties are encouraged to contact The Eleanor Roosevelt Papers Project at The George Washington University (erpapers@gwu.edu) for assistance in accessing the complete record of ER's activities from 1945 to 1962.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

LexisNexis has filmed The Papers of Eleanor Roosevelt, 1945–1952, Part 1: General Correspondence, 1945–1947, from holdings at the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library in Hyde Park, New York. The majority of the correspondence follows the death of Franklin D. Roosevelt in April 1945. In addition to correspondence, the collection includes reports, newspaper and periodical clippings, research papers, and poetry. The documents are organized by year, and folders within each year are broken into brief alphabetical ranges, resulting in nearly two thousand folders on nineteen reels of film. Reels one through four contain correspondence from 1945, reels four through nine contain materials exchanged during 1946, and reels nine through nineteen contain the considerable correspondence of 1947. Correspondents include Harry S. Truman and members of his administration, Felix Frankfurter, Charl Ormond Williams, Walter White, Helen Gahagan Douglas, Trygve Lie, Madam Chiang Kai-shek, Henry Morgenthau Jr., and members of the Roosevelt family.

The death of Franklin D. Roosevelt overshadows all other topics in this varied collection. Throughout 1945, and on the anniversaries of FDR's birth and death in 1946 and 1947, Eleanor Roosevelt was deluged with mail commemorating his life. Letters written by citizens of all ages describe the impact FDR had on their lives and often include memorializing verse. Because the collection contains hundreds if not thousands of poems and letters, the death of FDR has been indexed as a major topic only in instances of notable correspondents or considerable concentrations within folders.

Interspersed with the good wishes of sympathy letters is hostile correspondence that reflects the emerging cold war with the USSR. Eleanor Roosevelt was frequently called upon to defend the organizations she supported (particularly Americans for Democratic Action), professional associates, personal friends, and her own political views from accusations of Communism. In her letters, Roosevelt walked a fine line, criticizing the policies of the Communist Soviet Union, while recommending that the United Nations negotiate with its leaders rather than strategize against them. Amid the atmosphere created by the House Committee of Un-American Activities, the internal threat was often perceived as graver than the one from overseas. Roosevelt charted an independent path, aiding citizens barred from employment by charges of Communist activities, while in other cases rejecting claims that accused organizations were free from Communist influence.

Another dominant debate of the time was the settlement of Palestine by Jewish refugees from war-torn Europe. In part because of her work at the United Nations, Eleanor Roosevelt received many letters on the issue, both those urging her increased support for Israeli statehood and those condemning Jews' claims to land. Letters commending Roosevelt generally received a pleasant acknowledgment, but correspondents writing anti-Semitic or political litanies drew fiery rebuttals, countering their arguments point by point. It is in these exchanges that Roosevelt's polished professionalism lifts to reveal a woman of aggressive conviction.

The documents also indicate the range of social connections and obligations of a former First Lady, from interceding on behalf of distant relations with loved ones missing in Europe, to sending bath towels to the future Queen Elizabeth II in honor of her marriage. Other issues that emerge from the files include race relations and education in the United States, work for the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, atrocities of the Holocaust, fund-raising for a variety of social causes, and personal financial matters. Because much of the collection consists of materials Eleanor Roosevelt received, the guide writer uses detailed descriptions in the Reel Index, Major Topics, to highlight correspondence and commentary by Eleanor Roosevelt.

LexisNexis UPA collections comprise other collections that pertain to the themes found in The Papers of Eleanor Roosevelt, 1945–1952, Part 1: General Correspondence, 1945–1947. More on Eleanor Roosevelt can be found in The Papers of Eleanor Roosevelt, 1933–1945; The Papers of Eleanor Roosevelt, 1945–1962, Part 1: United Nations Correspondence and Publications and Part 2: United Nations Human Rights Commission Correspondence and Papers; and Documentary History of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Presidency, Volume 20: Eleanor Roosevelt, The Role of the First Lady. Documents exploring women's role in politics may be found in Papers of the League of Women Voters, 1918–1974, and The National Woman's Party Papers. Collections covering the cold war include Confidential U.S. State Department Files, Map Room Messages of President Truman (1945–1946), and President Harry S. Truman's Office Files, 1945–1953.

SOURCE NOTE

The material microfilmed for this publication is from the Eleanor Roosevelt Papers, Part II: April 5, 1945–1964, General Correspondence File, 1945–1962, Series: 1945–1952, in the custody of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library, Hyde Park, New York.

EDITORIAL NOTE

This microform collection consists of a wide variety of correspondence received by Eleanor Roosevelt during the post–White House years. The General Correspondence File consists primarily of incoming correspondence except for a small quantity of carbon copies of outgoing correspondence. In general, carbon copies were not kept for every typed outgoing letter nor were copies made of outgoing handwritten material. The General Correspondence File is subdivided into three chronological series: 1945–1952, 1953–1956, and 1957–1962. The file folders of correspondence in each series are arranged in alphabetical order, with the individual documents in chronological order within each folder.

LexisNexis has microfilmed all of the documents dated 1945 through 1947 within each alphabetically arranged folder in the 1945–1952 series as The Eleanor Roosevelt Papers from the FDR Library, General Correspondence, Part 1: 1945–1947. A small number of documents outside the 1945–1947 time frame have been microfilmed. These are primarily responses or follow-up letters to earlier correspondence and have been included in an effort to provide the researcher with a complete record on a specific topic or action.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

UPA would like to acknowledge the assistance and cooperation of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library in Hyde Park, New York. Mr. Raymond Teichman and his staff were most helpful and patient in providing the support necessary for completion of this microform. Their efforts are greatly appreciated.

SUBJECT INDEX

The following index is a guide to the major topics in this microform publication. The first number after each entry refers to the reel, while the four-digit number following the colon refers to the frame number at which a particular file folder containing information on the subject begins. Hence, 16: 0118 directs the researcher to the folder that begins at Frame 0118 of Reel 16. By referring to the Reel Index, which constitutes the initial section of this guide, the researcher will find the folder title, inclusive dates, and a list of Major Topics and Principal Correspondents, listed in the order in which they appear in the film.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

LexisNexis filmed The Papers of Eleanor Roosevelt, 1945–1952, Part 2: General Correspondence, 1948–1949, from holdings at the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library in Hyde Park, New York. In addition to correspondence, the collection includes reports, newspaper and periodical clippings, poetry, musical scores, and short stories. The documents are organized by year, and folders within each year are broken into brief alphabetical ranges, resulting in over three thousand folders on thirty-three reels of film. Reels one through eight and part of nine contain correspondence from 1948, and reels nine through thirty-three contain the bulk of the correspondence from 1949. Correspondents include members of the Harry S. Truman administration and other government officials, especially from the Department of State, Charl Ormond Williams, Walter White, Helen Gahagan Douglas, Trygve Lie, Madam Chiang Kai-shek, Henry Morgenthau Jr., and members of the Roosevelt family. Most correspondents, however, were ordinary men and women simply seeking an audience with one of the most influential women of their time.

Eleanor Roosevelt's work as a U.S. delegate to the United Nations (UN) constitutes one of the major topics in this collection. Eleanor Roosevelt (ER) was not only a delegate to the UN, but she also served on the UN Human Rights Commission (UNHR), which had the task of drafting a Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Due to ER's UN work, she received many letters related to the UN and world government. Many individuals expressed gratitude and admiration to ER for undertaking this task on behalf of the United States and the world. Not all of the correspondence, however, was favorable. ER often received letters critical of her work, the UNHR, and the declaration on which they worked. The following ER response to one critic of her UN work is typical: "It seems to me more practical to try to make the UN work as well as possible, learning constantly by association more about each other. In the long run your ideal [of world federalism] may be possible of attainment" (Reel 17, Frame 0622). The subjects of world government and world peace occupied the thoughts of many ER correspondents. Many sent her ideas for attaining both, while other correspondents criticized her for her personal associations, such as with the Americans for Democratic Action (ADA) and her stance on issues relating to the Soviet Union and Spain, which they felt would lead to war and not peace.

Roosevelt's UN work made her a very public figure worldwide and thus a recipient of letters not only from men and women in the United States but from abroad as well. Most of the foreign correspondence relates to refugees, immigration, and obtaining passports and visas. Correspondents believed that ER's work on the UNHR gave her a special position in which to broker a passport for their immigration or give them a voice for human rights abuses. Since the time period in this collection falls not long after the end of World War II, the subject of immigration and refugees is quite extensive.

Again because of the close proximity to World War II, ER also received documents from the International Refugee Organization (IRO) detailing their work in postwar Europe. The last few hundred frames on Reel 19, for example, contain quarterly and yearly reports from the Child Search Branch of the International Tracing Service of the IRO. The reports contain information on attempts to register unaccompanied children in Allied occupied zones in Germany and reunite them with their families and relatives, if possible. The report chronicles the process of registering children, compiling as much information on them as possible, and locating relatives in the countries of Europe. A fair number of documents are in German, French, Polish, and other European languages. The last folder on Reel 19 also contains a report on the Lebensborn program of Nazi leader Heinrich Himmler. The report details the program's origins, organizational structure, and activities such as "Germanizing" children and kidnapping "racially pure" children from alien nations. The folder further contains copies and translations of original Nazi documents detailing policies on children, orphaned or otherwise, from places such as Poland, specifically Lidice, and how they will be placed with German families and re-educated. The documents discuss the fact that children were first examined to determine if they were "racially desirable" and then were placed in homes or camps depending on the outcome of that determination.

Letters from U.S. men and women deal mostly with domestic issues such as U.S.-Soviet relations, ER's charity and philanthropic work, poems and tributes written about Franklin D. Roosevelt, civil rights and race relations, and requests for obtaining employment, both governmental and private. Dovetailing with the issue of employment is that of financial assistance and personal income. Correspondents often asked ER for monetary donations due to financial hardships. ER donated time and money to numerous charitable organizations, such as the Wiltwyck School for Boys, an interracial school for troubled youth in New York; but she still occasionally sent personal donations to individuals or more often attempted to direct them to other resources.

The church and state debate is one domestic issue that takes center stage in this collection. The Catholic Church, and Francis Cardinal Spellman in particular, called for federal aid to parochial schools and the use of school buses for children attending those schools. ER opposed this idea and was a strong supporter of separation of church and state. Spellman harshly criticized her as being anti-Catholic. Many documents in this collection deal with the overall debate, Spellman's response to ER, and ER's personal stance. She received nearly universal support, even from Catholics, with only slight criticism of her stance. The folders containing correspondence from Charl Ormond Williams hold a great deal of material on this topic (see Reel 9, Frame 0001 and Reel 33, Frames 0013 and 0202).

ER's personal life was just as full as her public life. Her time away from the UN was often spent traveling around the United States and abroad in order to participate in speaking engagements. Large portions of this collection deal with attempts to have ER appear for certain groups, and many of these appeals include lengthy documents explaining the nature of the engagement. ER also had a radio program with her daughter Anna Roosevelt Boettiger and completed her book This I Remember during 1948 and 1949. Due to ER's frequent speaking and radio appearances, she received many letters asking her to participate in contests or to serve as an honorary member of organizational boards. One correspondent, for example, sent ER information on the Voice of Democracy radio contest for junior and senior high school students in North Carolina hoping that ER would consent to being a judge for the contest. The documents highlight previous winners of the contest, including a picture and short biography of a 14-year-old Charles Kurault (Reel 32, Frame 0081). When not traveling or working for the UN, ER sought refuge in her Hyde Park, New York, home. But this solitude was often interrupted by visitors, both invited and not, as well as personal work that she was asked to do. Publishing companies, for example, often sent her unpublished manuscripts for review. Harper & Brothers sent her the galleys for Irwin Ross's Strategy for Liberals, which can be found on Reel 28. Harper & Brothers hoped to use ER's comments on the book's dust jacket.

As can be seen, Eleanor Roosevelt had many public and private associations. She was constantly called on to give her opinion on domestic and foreign situations, which she always did in a caring but firm manner. The following is one example of her response to a correspondent: "We are extremely fortunate to be living in America and our good fortune gives us a responsibility as citizens in the leading Democracy of the world. The eyes of the world are on us and as we make our democracy work, we will encourage those who long for freedom. We must fight discrimination and intolerance and learn to look upon people as individuals and not as belonging to any race, nationality or religion. We, in the United States, have much to be proud of, some things to be ashamed of and every opportunity to improve and progress” (Reel 21, Frames 0572–0573).

More on Eleanor Roosevelt can be found in the following collections from LexisNexis: The Papers of Eleanor Roosevelt, 1933–1945; The Papers of Eleanor Roosevelt, 1945–1952, Part 1: General Correspondence, 1945–1947; The Papers of Eleanor Roosevelt, 1945–1962, Part 1: United Nations Correspondence and Publications and Part 2: United Nations Human Rights Commission Correspondence and Papers; and Documentary History of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Presidency, Volume 20: Eleanor Roosevelt, The Role of the First Lady. Documents exploring women’s roles in politics may be found in Papers of the League of Women Voters, 1918–1974, and The National Woman’s Party Papers. Collections covering the cold war include Confidential U.S. State Department Files, Map Room Messages of President Truman (1945–1946), and President Harry S. Truman’s Office Files, 1945–1953.

SOURCE NOTE

LexisNexis microfilmed this collection from the Eleanor Roosevelt Papers, Part II: April 5, 1945–1964, General Correspondence File, 1945–1962, Series 1945–1952, in the custody of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library, Hyde Park, New York.

EDITORIAL NOTE

This microform collection consists of a wide variety of correspondence received by Eleanor Roosevelt during the post–White House years. The General Correspondence File consists primarily of incoming correspondence except for a small quantity of carbon copies of outgoing correspondence. In general, carbon copies were not kept for every typed outgoing letter nor were copies made of outgoing handwritten material. The General Correspondence File is subdivided into three chronological series: 1945–1952, 1953–1956, and 1957–1962. The file folders of correspondence in each series are arranged in alphabetical order, with the individual documents in chronological order within each folder.

LexisNexis has microfilmed all of the documents dated 1948 through 1949 within each alphabetically arranged folder in the 1945–1952 series as The Eleanor Roosevelt Papers from the FDR Library, General Correspondence, Part 2: 1948–1949. A small number of documents outside the 1948–1949 time frame have been microfilmed. These are primarily responses or follow-up letters to earlier correspondence and have been included in an effort to provide the researcher with a complete record on a specific topic or action.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

UPA would like to acknowledge the assistance and cooperation of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library in Hyde Park, New York. Raymond Teichman and his staff were most helpful and patient in providing the support necessary for completion of this microform. Their efforts are greatly appreciated.

PRINCIPAL CORRESPONDENTS INDEX

The following index is a guide to the principal correspondents in this microfilm publication. The first number after each entry refers to the reel, while the four-digit number following the colon refers to the frame number at which a particular file folder containing correspondence by the person begins. Hence, 33: 0925 refers to the folder that begins at Frame 0925 of Reel 33. By referring to the Reel Index, which constitutes the initial section of this guide, the researcher will find the folder title, inclusive dates, and a list of Major Topics and Principal Correspondents, listed in the order in which they appear on the film.

SUBJECT INDEX

The following index is a guide to the major topics in this microform publication. The first number after each entry refers to the reel, while the four-digit number following the colon refers to the frame number at which the file containing information on the subject begins. Hence, 9: 0388 directs researchers to Frame 0388 of Reel 9. By referring to the Reel Index, which constitutes the initial section of this guide, the researcher will find topics listed in the order in which they appear on the film.

Eleanor Roosevelt's work as a U.S. delegate to the United Nations constitutes one of the major topics in this collection. Eleanor Roosevelt was not only a delegate to the United Nations, but she also served on the UN Human Rights Commission (UNHR), which had the task of drafting a Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Roosevelt's UN work made her a very public figure worldwide and thus a recipient of letters not only from men and women in the United States but from abroad as well. Most of the foreign correspondence relates to refugees, immigration, and obtaining passports and visas. Correspondents believed that Eleanor Roosevelt's work on the UNHR gave her a special position in which to broker a passport for their immigration or to give them a voice for human rights abuses.

Again because of the close proximity to World War II, Eleanor Roosevelt also received documents from the International Refugee Organization (IRO) detailing their work in postwar Europe. One folder in this collection contains a report on the Lebensborn program of Nazi leader Heinrich Himmler. The report details the program's origins, organizational structure, and activities such as "Germanizing" children and kidnapping "racially pure" children from alien nations.

Letters from U.S. men and women deal mostly with domestic issues such as U.S.-Soviet relations, Eleanor Roosevelt's charity and philanthropic work, poems and tributes written about Franklin D. Roosevelt, civil rights and race relations, and requests for obtaining employment, both governmental and private. Dovetailing with the issue of employment is that of financial assistance and personal income. Correspondents often asked Eleanor Roosevelt for monetary donations due to financial hardships. Indeed, she donated time and money to numerous charitable organizations and occasionally sent personal donations to individuals or more often attempted to direct them to other resources.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

LexisNexis has filmed The Papers of Eleanor Roosevelt, 1945–1952, Part 3: 1950, from the holdings at the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library in Hyde Park, New York. The majority of the correspondence relates to Eleanor Roosevelt's involvement in drafting the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. In addition to documents relating to the declaration, Roosevelt received many letters from concerned citizens who felt she was an approachable public figure. Also contained in this collection are newspaper and magazine clippings, pictures, poems, and brochures covering almost every imaginable topic. The documents are organized alphabetically according to their main topic or principal correspondent. The result is over thirteen hundred folders in twenty rolls of microfilm. Correspondents include Dean Acheson, Helen Gahagan Douglas, Walter White, Felix Frankfurter, and multiple members of the Roosevelt family; but regular citizens authored the majority of documents. In the Principal Correspondents index, correspondents' names appear only if they contributed a significant number of documents or letters. Many names that appear as folder titles are not included in the Principal Correspondents index. If a name is not found in the Principal Correspondents index, it is possible that it appears in the Subject Index.

Eleanor Roosevelt's service as a delegate to the United Nations caused many private citizens to associate her with the emerging interest in world peace and human rights. In addition to her work as a delegate, Roosevelt's work on the Universal Declaration of Human Rights led many to believe that she was capable of influencing national and international policy. Many letters contain details of plans for world peace or of initiatives that the authors believe would lead to world peace. While naïve, many concepts were logical, including ideas for world governments and international armies to promote and maintain peace. Interspersed among the reasonable documents are examples of more fanciful ideas such as the need for a world calendar to ensure peace or the "Lovetomic Bomb" (Reel 9, Frame 0777).

Given that the documents in this collection are from the late 1940s to early 1950s, it is no surprise that the cold war and communism are reoccurring themes. In many cases, letter writers called on Roosevelt to denounce the Communist sympathies of her famous associates, including Paul Robeson and Trygve Lie. Roosevelt received letters detailing multiple Communist plots to subjugate the United States and stories of complex conspiracy theories involving Communist plans. Looking through the lens of the twenty-first century it is easy to dismiss these letters, but when one considers the general mood of the nation during this period, the sincere concern of the average citizen becomes clear.

In 1950, with the cold war underway, a new military conflict faced the U.S. government and people. In June of that year, the army of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (North Korea) crossed the 38th parallel starting the Korean War. A new war threatened the fledgling United Nations by testing its ability to prevent conflict. Roosevelt, as one of the most famous faces of the United Nations, received a great deal of correspondence related to the new war and the UN's plans to cease hostilities. In addition to fielding questions related to the impact of the Korean War, Roosevelt was often called to serve various nonprofit organizations in multiple capacities. To those composing a board of directors for almost any school, peace plan, or women's organization, Roosevelt's name rose to the top of the list. Her instinct was to lend her support to worthy organizations; however, she often found herself stretched too thin and repeatedly declined to join even the most prominent organizations. Since Roosevelt is assumed to be one of the principal correspondents in every folder, the guide writer has purposely omitted her name from the Principal Correspondents index.

More on Eleanor Roosevelt can be found in the following collections from LexisNexis: The Papers of Eleanor Roosevelt, 1933–1945; The Papers of Eleanor Roosevelt, 1945–1952, Part 1: General Correspondence, 1945–1947; The Papers of Eleanor Roosevelt, 1945–1962, Part 1: United Nations Correspondence and Publications and Part 2: United Nations Human Rights Commission Correspondence and Publications; and Documentary History of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Presidency, Volume 20, Eleanor Roosevelt: The Role of the First Lady. Documents exploring women's roles in politics may be found in Papers of the League of Women Voters, 1918–1974, and The National Woman's Party Papers. Collections covering the cold war include Confidential U.S. State Department Files, Map Room Messages of President Truman (1945–1946), and President Harry S. Truman's Office Files, 1945–1953.

SOURCE NOTE

LexisNexis microfilmed this collection from the Eleanor Roosevelt Papers, Part II: April 5, 1945–1964, General Correspondence File, 1945–1962, Series 1945–1952, in the custody of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library, Hyde Park, New York.

EDITORIAL NOTE

This microform collection consists of a wide variety of correspondence received by Eleanor Roosevelt during the post–White House years. The General Correspondence File consists primarily of incoming correspondence except for a small quantity of carbon copies of outgoing correspondence. In general, carbon copies were not kept for every typed outgoing letter nor were copies made of outgoing handwritten material. The General Correspondence File is subdivided into three chronological series: 1945–1952, 1953–1956, and 1957–1962. The file folders of correspondence in each series are arranged in alphabetical order, with the individual documents in chronological order within each folder.

LexisNexis has microfilmed all of the documents from 1950 within each alphabetically arranged folder in the 1945–1952 series as The Eleanor Roosevelt Papers from the FDR Library, General Correspondence, Part 3: 1950. A small number of documents outside 1950 have been microfilmed. These are primarily responses or follow-up letters to earlier correspondence and have been included in an effort to provide the researcher with a complete record on a specific topic or action.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

UPA would like to acknowledge the assistance and cooperation of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library in Hyde Park, New York. Raymond Teichman and his staff were most helpful and patient in providing the support necessary for completion of this microform. Their efforts are greatly appreciated.

Eleanor Roosevelt's service as a delegate to the United Nations caused many private citizens to associate her with the emerging interest in world peace and human rights. Moreover, Roosevelt's work on the Universal Declaration of Human Rights led many to believe that she was capable of influencing national and international policy.

Many letters in this collection contain details of plans for world peace or of initiatives that the authors believed would lead to world peace. While naïve, many concepts were logical, including ideas for world governments and international armies to promote and maintain peace. Interspersed among the reasonable documents, however, are examples of more fanciful ideas, such as the rather interesting idea one group had of setting off a "Lovetomic Bomb":

"What is this, what are they saying?
This is not a bomb of war but one of peace
—a Lovetomic Bomb!!"

Given that the documents in this collection are from the late 1940s to early 1950s, it is no surprise that the cold war and communism are reoccurring themes. In many cases, letter writers called on Roosevelt to denounce the Communist sympathies of her famous associates, including Paul Robeson and Trygve Lie. Roosevelt received letters detailing multiple Communist plots to subjugate the United States and stories of complex conspiracy theories involving Communist plans. Looking through the lens of the twenty-first century it is easy to dismiss these letters, but when one considers the general mood of the nation during this period, the sincere concern of the average citizen becomes clear.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

LexisNexis has filmed The Papers of Eleanor Roosevelt, 1945–1952, Part 4: 1951–1952, from the holdings at the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library in Hyde Park, New York. The vast amount of the collection comprises correspondence, but also includes newspaper and magazine clippings, brochures, poetry, music, photographs, drawings, and many miscellaneous items. The folder titles are organized in alphabetical order with a date or date span after each folder title. There are over nine hundred folders on twenty-one reels of film. Most of the correspondence came from the general public with the remaining coming from government officials, such as Harry S. Truman, Winston S. Churchill, Durward V. Sandifer, and Walter White; activists such as Henry Viscardi Jr.; representatives of organizations; members of royalty; and the Roosevelt family.

Eleanor Roosevelt's introduction as the "First Lady of the World" (Reel 5, Frame 0175) is a tribute to her extraordinary work as both delegate to the United Nations (UN) and head of the United Nations Human Rights Commission. In addition to her work at the UN, she was a spokesperson for human rights through her writing of magazine articles, her column "My Day," radio broadcasts, television appearances, and many speaking engagements throughout the world.

There were many requests from individuals, publications, and organizations for mention in Eleanor Roosevelt's column, "My Day," such as the twenty-fifth anniversary of Parents' Magazine (Reel 14, Frame 0444). She addressed current issues in the column and received much mail expressing praise as well as criticism from the press (Reel 15, Frames 0123 and 0136). In response to a letter, Eleanor Roosevelt wrote "I am sorry you feel that international cooperation is not worth trying. I am afraid you do not realize that the day has come when no nation can exist alone" (Reel 19, Frame 1044). In a column mentioning youth, she wrote about the twenty-fourth exchange of flags and friendship between students of the schools of Mexico and the United States—youth building a better world (Reel 18, Frame 0233).

Whether traveling for the UN or on personal visits, Eleanor Roosevelt was profoundly affected by what she saw and experienced. In a letter on behalf of the United Jewish Appeal (UJA), she wrote "The UJA needs great quantities of cash to speed the emigration of distressed Jews from danger areas like Iraq" (Reel 18, Frame 0757). Later she recounted, "I shall never forget the tragedy of some of the Jewish camps—tragedies of age and youth brought about by Hitler's barbaric racial and religious policies" (Reel 18, Frame 0811). There were numerous requests for donations, many to which she responded, including B'nai B'rith. Much of her interest in immigration, the aged, youth, and discrimination was fueled both by these experiences and by related correspondence from the public.

Some of the correspondence in the collection is of a very personal nature and gives a keyhole view of Eleanor Roosevelt's struggles. Referring to the affair of FDR, Ralph E. Cropley wrote: "By never acknowledging what I had done to keep such evidence of Franklin's gay life from ever seeing the light of publicity, you hurt my feelings very much.... I wrote you I was destroying those pictures and films...in which you did not appear, but others who might be damaging to Franklin's memory, did" (Reel 5, Frame 0076). In a letter to a friend, Eleanor Roosevelt writes about her children and the 1952 presidential election: "We had fun during the Summer because John, who is a business man, quite naturally went all out for General Eisenhower. Elliott kept quiet but I think voted for him in the end. Jimmy, Franklin Junior, my daughter Anna and I, on the other hand, went as far as we could for Governor Stevenson and still managed though we argued violently when we met, to speak to each other at the end of the campaign" (Reel 15, Frame 0166).

Eleanor Roosevelt actively participated in charities and causes that helped those less fortunate. The public felt close to her and would often request money and favors of acquiring passports, among other things. At times she felt overwhelmed by the requests and always replied that she could not possibly help everyone, but occasionally she would receive a song or a poem like the following: "Hear the prayer of the little sick child, the paralytic child of Warm Springs...for his is the voice of an angel with clipped wings" (Reel 6, Frame 0087).

The Roosevelt family dog, Fala, died in April 1952 and was buried in Hyde Park at the foot of FDR's grave. In life, Fala sat at the feet of FDR and therefore it seemed appropriate that he be buried at FDR's feet (Reel 4, Frame 0627 and Reel 6, Frame 0732). The public recognized the importance of Fala in Eleanor Roosevelt's life, and numerous notes of sympathy arrived at her Hyde Park residence.

Eleanor Roosevelt resigned from the Human Rights Commission (Reel 6, Frame 0446 and Reel 8, Frame 0728) and retired from the United Nations (Reel 10, Frame 0101) in 1952.

Researchers can find more on Eleanor Roosevelt in the following collections from LexisNexis: The Papers of Eleanor Roosevelt, 1933–1945; The Papers of Eleanor Roosevelt, 1945–1952, Part 1: General Correspondence, 1945–1947; The Papers of Eleanor Roosevelt, 1945–1962, Part 1: United Nations Correspondence and Publications and Part 2: United Nations Human Rights Commission Correspondence and Papers; and Documentary History of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Presidency, Volume 20: Eleanor Roosevelt, The Role of the First Lady. Researchers can also find documents exploring women's roles in politics in Papers of the League of Women Voters, 1918–1974, and The National Woman's Party Papers. Collections covering the cold war include Confidential U.S. State Department Files, Map Room Messages of President Truman (1945–1946), and President Harry S. Truman's Office Files, 1945–1953.

SOURCE NOTE

EDITORIAL NOTE

This microform collection comprises a wide variety of correspondence received by Eleanor Roosevelt during the post–White House years. The General Correspondence File consists primarily of incoming correspondence except for a small quantity of carbon copies of outgoing correspondence. In general, carbon copies were not kept for every typed outgoing letter nor were copies made of outgoing handwritten material. The General Correspondence File is subdivided into three chronological series: 1945–1952, 1953–1956, and 1957–1962. The file folders of correspondence in each series are arranged in alphabetical order, with the individual documents in chronological order within each folder.

LexisNexis has microfilmed all of the documents dated 1948 through 1949 within each alphabetically arranged folder in the 1945–1952 series as The Eleanor Roosevelt Papers from the FDR Library, General Correspondence, Part 4: 1951–1952. A small number of documents outside the 1948–1949 time frame have been microfilmed. These are primarily responses or follow-up letters to earlier correspondence and have been included in an effort to provide the researcher with a complete record on a specific topic or action.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

UPA would like to acknowledge the assistance and cooperation of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library in Hyde Park, New York. Raymond Teichman and his staff were most helpful and patient in providing the support necessary for completion of this microform. Their efforts are greatly appreciated.

PRINCIPAL CORRESPONDENTS INDEX

The following index is a guide to the principal correspondents in this microform publication. The first number after each entry refers to the reel, while the four-digit number following the colon refers to the frame number at which the file containing information on the subject begins. Hence, 1: 0001 directs researchers to Frame 0001 of Reel 1. By referring to the Reel Index, which constitutes the initial segment of this guide, the researcher will find the folder title; inclusive dates, and a list of Major Topics and Principal Correspondents, listed in the order in which they appear on the film.

Most correspondence in this collection is either to or from Eleanor Roosevelt. Therefore her name is not included as a principal correspondent in this index.

SUBJECT INDEX

The following index is a guide to the major topics in this microform publication. The first number after each entry refers to the reel, while the four-digit number following the colon refers to the frame number at which the file containing information on the subject begins. Hence, 1: 1001 directs researchers to Frame 1001 of Reel 1. By referring to the Reel Index, which constitutes the initial segment of this guide, the researcher will find the folder title; inclusive dates, and a list of Major Topics and Principal Correspondents, listed in the order in which they appear on the film.

Recognized by many as the “First Lady of the World,” Eleanor Roosevelt worked as both delegate to the United Nations (UN) and head of the United Nations Human Rights Commission. Her interests were broad—forging trails leading the fight against discrimination for the aged, the immigrant, and minorities.

In addition to her work at the UN, Eleanor Roosevelt was a spokesperson for human rights through her writings of magazine articles, her column “My Day,” radio broadcasts, television appearances, and many speaking engagements throughout the world. She addressed current issues in her column and received much mail expressing praise as well as criticism, including hate mail (Reel 15, Frames 0123 and 0136). In response to a letter Eleanor Roosevelt wrote “I am sorry you feel that international cooperation is not worth trying. I am afraid you do not realize that the day has come when no nation can exist alone” (Reel 19, Frame 1044). She received much mail responding to her column and tried to answer every letter no matter how trivial or whether it was a negative or positive response.

Whether traveling for the UN or on personal visits, Eleanor Roosevelt was profoundly affected by what she saw and experienced. In a letter on behalf of the United Jewish Appeal (UJA) she wrote “The UJA needs great quantities of cash to speed the emigration of distressed Jews from danger areas like Iraq (Reel 18, Frame 0757) and later recounting, “I shall never forget the tragedy of some of the Jewish camps—tragedies of age and youth brought about by Hitler’s barbaric racial and religious policies” (Reel 18, Frame 0811).

Some of the correspondence in the collection is of a very personal nature and gives a keyhole view of Eleanor Roosevelt’s struggles. Referring to Franklin D. Roosevelt’s affair, Ralph E. Cropley wrote “By never acknowledging what I had done to keep such evidence of Franklin’s gay life from ever seeing the light of publicity, you hurt my feelings very much.... I wrote you I was destroying those pictures and films...in which you did not appear, but others who might be damaging to Franklin’s memory, did” (Reel 5, Frame 0076). Eleanor Roosevelt actively participated in charities and causes that helped those less fortunate. The public felt close to her and would often request money and favors of acquiring passports among other things. At times she felt overwhelmed by the requests and always replied that she could not possibly help everyone, but occasionally she would receive a song or a poem like the following: “Hear the prayer of the little sick child, the paralytic child of Warm Springs...for his is the voice of an angel with clipped wings” (Reel 6, Frame 0087).

Eleanor Roosevelt resigned from the Human Rights Commission and retired from the United Nations in 1952. The culmination of her life’s work in these documents is a rare gift to researchers.
